SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1909.

Frank H. Hitchcock, postmaster general, is reported to be another Andrew Jackson, but on the republican side. He has appointed Charles P. Grandfield postmaster of the District of Columbia, which is said to forecast future appointments on the line of "to the victors belongs the spoils."

The University of Oregon is happy—but it worked for it as it never did before. It succeeded in defeating the Agriculturalists of Corvallis by a score of 12 to nothing, and the boys at Eugene think they are bigger and better players than the man from Yale, Robert W. Forbes, who coached them to success.

The irony of fate. A Pennsylvania farmer's wife skipped out with another man, taking with her all the live stock from the ranch save one lone mule, and that night the mule kicked the deserted husband and killed him. No one knows, but mayhap the farmer, in expressing joy over good luck, slapped the old mule a little too hard when he went to the barn that evening, and the congratulatory blow was taken seriously by the lonesome old mule who kicked back with fatal result.

The "good old days of '49" are brought to mind most vividly in the telegraphic dispatch from Malheur county of a court proceeding there. Two local attorneys were trying a case before the judge in Malheur City, but could only secure three jurors. Two of these were excused on challenges, therefore by agreement it was decided to proceed with the case before the lone juror. This was done, and when the defendant was called to testify, a big six-shooter dropped from his pocket, and it was requested by counsel for plaintiff that the court order the artillery sent to a requested spot, or some of the spectators from abroad might suffer from frustration. And this was all right, and finally, the evidence all in and the pleas made the "jury" retired to deliberate. Presently it was announced that a decision had been reached, and the "jury" was brought in and the usual question propounded. But the verdict was sealed, and the "jury" especially requested the court not to open it until another attorney could be consulted. The "jury" was refused in this apparently peculiar petition, and the verdict was read, which found for the plaintiff, and then it dawned upon the court that perhaps the spectators were not the only ones to suffer from nervousness on account of that big gun.

This year Roseburg had a strawberry festival that was heard of from one end of the union to the other. There is a chance for another at the same time next year, with this difference that we will have time to make it better than the last one was. Other towns in the state attempted to imitate our success and failed. We can improve and will do it. We have the earliest and best strawberries grown in the state of Oregon, and lovers of berries pat their stomachs and expand their faces when Douglas county strawberries are announced on the market. With plenty of the best berries grown it is easy to have the best strawberry festival. But the festival last year showed the possibilities of having the strawberry festival comprehend something more, in conjunction with it there was the largest and best bred livestock show that has ever been seen in the southern part of Oregon, embracing horses in all lines, cattle of all breeds, and the city entertained 10,000 visitors without crowding or to the discomfort of anyone. If we start now and take our time to it we can have the festival embrace other features that the first did not. We can make it take the features of a fair, and embrace in competitive shape everything that grows in Southern Oregon or that is produced in this county, and instead of 10,000 people we will have nearly 20,000. Treat people well once and they will come again; treat them well twice and they are your friends for ever. Roseburg did the handsome thing with those who visited here at the festival last June and with the experience the city has enjoyed the next festival will make everyone who attends it a friend forever of the home of the strawberry and the rose.

WHY THEY DON'T LAY.

Many who keep hens are asking themselves just about now why their pullets don't lay, when the fact is that a lot of their young stock was hatched too late, or was not given proper food and care during growth. The size and general appearance of a pullet does not always denote the time when she should commence the producing of eggs. I have seen flocks of pretty big, nice pullets and they would hardly lay an egg all winter. The first essential for winter eggs is the right kind of stock to produce them. Food will not supply that want. It may help some in some instances, it's pretty difficult to help matters very much by giving extra care. The struts has got to be of the right sort. After being in the poultry business so long and seeing so many people fail and experiment and work in the effort to get eggs from stock that had no eggs to lay, no inclination to even make eggs or ability to commence to get ready to lay, it is impressed all the stronger upon my mind that there is a whole lot to this hen business besides feed and care.—Inland Farmer.
