WILBUR IS IN TROUBLE.

Complaint of Members of the Railway Commission.

SALEM, Nov. 20.—Since their depot and ware house were destroyed by fire, May 2, 1908, the patrons of the Southern Pacific railroad at Wilbur have been without adequate depot facilities. In a petition presented yesterday afternoon to the Railroad Commission of the state, to which 61 signatures are attached, the claim is made that a box car is made to do duty as a freight station and that a corner in a crowded storeroom has been the ticket office and waiting room of the railroad in that city for the last 18 months; that this service is entirely inadequate; and that repeated efforts have been made by Wilbur citizens, by private letter, by personal interviews and by public petitions, to induce the railroad company to remedy the evil complained of, but without avail. The commission has taken the matter up with the railroad officials.

NOTICE

We, the undersigned taxpayers of road district No. 13, hereby give notice that a public meeting will be held at Ten Mile School House in said road district No. 13, of Douglas county, Oregon, on Saturday, December 11, 1909, beginning at 2 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of voting an additional tax upon all personal and real property situated in said road district, for the purpose of improving the public road in said road district.

WHAT HEALTH RESTS UPON

The twentieth century has come to see that health depends upon a very few definite principles. These principles apply to woman as well as to man. Interdependent in a large measure, the body is a vital-chemical-mechanical instrument, and as such it responds to certain definite laws. That to say, the human organism has several aspects to be considered. The body is a mechanical machine, it is also a chemical machine, it is also a vital machine and each of these are inseparably associated with our mental organization. Each of these sides to human existence must be considered. The osteopath gives each of these factors due consideration in hunting down the causes of sickness. In the realm of vitality with its animating psychic force we know that thought and will have a very great influence, either for health or disease. Optimism, good cheer, determination, calm, serenity—rightly used—all make for health. Pessimism, discouragement, worry, fear and depression all cause to help and prolong disease.

In the realm of chemistry, we have to do with the nourishment and waste of the body. The normal integrity of the body depends upon a continuous supply of the elements and compounds which go to make up the body itself. These are all found in the natural foods and when the supply is normal it is not usually necessary to make any change in this direction.

It the body is then ill-nourished it is sure that it is a failure on the part of the machine to appropriate, to assimilate, the nourishment present in the food.

But when we find—as we sometimes do—a young lady who is trying the experiment of living on pickles and chocolate creams, we know that treatment, to bring results, must change the food so as to supply the things which are not found in such a diet. Quite frequently digestive disturbances may not be apparent, even with such troubles, when the food supply is normal.

The difficulty may be mental or it may be mechanical and the treatment in each case must be of a nature to correspond.

Treatment must fit the case. In the realm of mechanics, we have a principle which was not realized or understood to any extent until the discoveries of Dr. A. T. Still brought them to general notice. Even now, in spite of the reasonableness of the principle, many people refuse to believe and investigate. But that is the fate of all innovations at first. After a while we forget that we so much as refused to investigate, and we come to think that we always believed and understood.

We know—we have known for a long time—that the body, on the physical side, is an intricate and highly perfected machine admirably adapted to its purpose. We have realized only recently that this delicately adjusted machine goes out of adjustment. We expect to take a fine watch to a jeweler about once a year; and yet we expect our bodies to remain in good mechanical condition for a life time without any special attention! If our bodies were less perfect, we would have realized the importance of mechanical adjustment long ago. But so many do actually manage to get on with no serious disturbance, that it actually required the culmination of nineteenth century thought to reason as far as that the human body gets out of mechanical order just like any other machine and then needs actual repairing, adjusting—not drugging.

In either the modern physician must have these three principles—mind, chemistry and mechanics—constantly before him, and from the osteopathic view point the greatest of these, the most fundamentally important, and the least understood and regarded—is mechanics.

The day is fast coming when the sick will with good reason demand something more than a mere "combating of symptoms." Medicine has never yet had the right to the title of a science. But if it can be reduced to a basis of cause and effect, much will have been accomplished in that direction.

And that is what is already upon us. Osteopathy has come into the field on an entirely independent basis. The older schools have admittedly aimed their treatment at the outward symptoms of the trouble without much reference to causes. Osteopathy, on the other hand, uses symptoms of the trouble without much reference to causes. Osteopathy, on the other hand, uses symptoms only as guides in the effort to find out what is causing the patient's disorder. At the same time the osteopath investigates the condition of the body from the point of first principles—from the standpoint of mechanics, nutrition and mind. Having found the causes of the trouble, the treatment consists in removing the disturbance in the quickest and most natural way possible. Treatment consists largely in tissue adjustments. The human machine is now adjusted instead, as formerly, of being drugged.—Osteopathic Health.

HIS POWERS TESTED

A GIFTED HEALER

Edw. Olney was visited by a citizen of our city who, after investigating the healer, claims and pronounces him a remarkable man. When interviewed the gentleman said: "In the person of Mr. Olney I found a man of profound significance. He has a gift—call it what you will—that is beyond my comprehension for power he does possess. I was never very interested in this sort of a thing, but having a roaring in my ears I desired to see what he could do. He cured me all right, and while there a gentleman whom I know positively to have been crippled with rheumatism for two years was healed and was able to put on his coat without aid. I was dumfounded and do not hesitate to say that he is beyond me. I did not mention my experience to my friends and relatives for fear they would discredit my sanity or consider me too credulous. However, I would advise everyone sick and suffering to see Mr. Olney and he is healed. He is always glad to meet you and invites everybody to call on him and get a free booklet and explanation of his work."

No greater service has been rendered to womankind than the giving by Dr. Fredrick K. Stearns of his remarkable prescription for the many weaknesses with which women are afflicted.

This great remedy is being placed on the market by the New York and London Drug Company and is labeled "Nyal's Vegetable Prescription," "a boon to womankind."

The local drug firm, Fullerton & Richardson, are agents for Roseburg. They report as follows:

"Nyal's remedies are superior to all of the highly exploited patent medicines, but the best of the Nyal's line is the "Vegetable Prescription."

"During the many years we have sold drugs in Roseburg we have never heard as much favorable commendation of any other medicine. Nyal's Vegetable Prescription has received the praise of every woman who has used it."

Other Nyal's medicines which are worthy of mention at this particular season are:

Nyal's Baby Cough Remedy for colds. Relieves difficult breathing.

Nyal's Croup Ointment.

Nyal's Cod Liver Oil Compound without the oil. It is better than "Vino!" or Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil and is an ideal system builder and tonic.
