Five hundred bales of hops belonging to Isane Phenes & Sons have been submerged near the east bank of the Willamette river, opposite Independence, entailing a less of $25,000.

The warehouse in which the hops were stered stands back from the river half a mile, but its site is really lower than the land near the river, as the land slopes castward at that point. The water is upy to the caves of the bulleling, and an attempt to save some of the belies by cutting a hole in the roof and lifting them out failed on account of the weight of the wet bops.
