HOW THE INDIANS HEALED THEIR SICK

Hundreds of Years Before the White Man Thought Such Methods Wise.

The American Indian is the craftiest, most reasoning and deepest student of nature of all barbaric or semi-barbaric people.

He knows more about the science of nature, his history shows a deeper touch of nature's laws, than even the legends of the Syrian or Caucasian race.

Especially interesting is the study of the Indian and his methods for curing his sick. In addition to his wonderful knowledge of plant life and the mixing of it to bring forth health conditions, the Indian is said to be the first race to study the value of mineral water baths. Long before the chemists and alchemists of Europe had analyzed the waters of their famous springs and found medicinal properties there, the North American Indian was curing his sick at Paso Robles Hot Springs.

The old Franciscan monks, while making their wonderful journeys, building their missions and teaching Christianity along the California coast, frequently sat at the Indian council camp fires and heard there the tales of a wonderful spring where-in to bathe was to be made free from disease.

These tales seemed unholy worship and nonsense to the holy fathers, but at length they too caught the enthusiasm of the Indian and their sick began the pilgrimage to Paso Robles (The Pass of the Oaks), so named by these holy men.

Then began a series of reports to the papal home of the church and to the King of Spain, so that early in the reign of Castile over California these springs were regarded as the ideal spot sought for by Ponce de Leon.

Not aside from the romance of the Indian and from holy reports of the Franciscan monks, Paso Robles today is making fame for her waters by reason of its wonderful cures.

Rheumatism, gout, kidney and stomach troubles disappear before the bath treatments at Paso Robles so quickly that the citizens of Paso Robles claim no case can be severe enough to defeat the waters, from making a cure. Tuberculosis and spleen diseases are not permitted treatment.

Nervous women who have been cured of all ailments of female life, form a conspicuous series of testimonial proof of the beneficial effects of Paso Robles springs.

Here one meets the worn out laborer praising the waters for their gifts to him, while at his side perhaps speaks the clubman from the city, whose living has worn down his system.

Many health pilgrims arrive at Paso Robles with camping outfits and live in tents while being cured, being unable to afford the luxury of a boarding house.

Here also are the rich in their luxurious hotel with private bath house and all the special attention they demand. The air of Paso Robles is as rich and as perfect as its water, this fact alone being of greatest benefit to its curing power.

A small book, neatly illustrated, has been recently published by the management telling the story of the Hot Springs in a most interesting manner and giving complete information. Send for it, either to Wm. McMurray, general passenger agent of the O. R. & N., Portland, Or., or Dr. P. W. Sawyer, manager, Paso Robles, Cal.

EXPERIENCES IN DAIRYING

What the East Has Discovered Is Good for Oregon.

How many cows belong to the Cow Culture club?

In other words, how many Indiana cows are really aristocrats, or merely members of the common herd—if an inoffensive pun is permitted?

Without pausing to answer the question abruptly, it is safe to say that more butter for the bread slices—and better butter, too—is being produced in Indiana now than ever before, while a much better quality of milk is being consumed by the adult and infant, says the Indianapolis Star.

It is only of late years that farmer or stock raiser of the Hoosier state has awakened to the possibilities found in the raising of blue blooded stock. He could see the advantage in better horses and occasionally better pigs, but as a general thing he was content to keep his "old cow" as she was. He was indifferently aware that his cows made enough milk and butter for his immediate needs—and wasn't that enough? He had no time for fooling with cows—his farm always needed his attention.

Gradually there has been an awakening and today some of the world's best dairy cows have been bred and raised within the confines of the state. No longer does the nondescript "family helper" stroll down through the winding road of an early morning, after yielding her two quarts of watery milk, and spend the day in the stalk field or wood pasture clipping the herbage to the clank of a brass bell that tells her owner where the boy with the stone bruise on his heel can find her when it comes time to "fetch the cows home." The Indiana dairy herds and the herds of the well to do farmer, now, are classed among the best in the world. The Indiana cow owners have become ambitious and nowadays every cow must have a certificate of "culture" or be ignominiously outlabeled. The "culture system" is absurdly simple and consists of a note book and a pair of scales, yet by their use Indiana has trebled its dairy outputs in the last decade. In fact, the movement for better cows is country wide and it is proposed to double the nation's production of an article of dairy diet already of more value than any crop except corn and equal to one third of all cereals grown in all the states and territories.

Every 12 months the American milk cow adds $800,000,000 to the wealth of the nation, and Indiana contributes more than its share to this wealth.

Of course, weighing a cow's milk will not make her give more, but it will make her owner put a better one in her place, if she is found wanting. Good results from such a method are not slow in coming, as many an Indiana farmer has found. For example, it was found that one cow in a herd gave 10,183 pounds of milk at a cost of $63, while another of the same herd gave only 4,089 pounds at a cost of $59. The moral was obvious. The latter cow had no right to membership in the "499" and was fit only for sausage. Indiana, as has been said, was slow to learn these lessons, but it finally did so. New York learned them, as did Iowa and Illinois and many other states—that did not imagine there were riches in the blue blooded dairy herds.

Men who really know the game do not any more subscribe to the philosophy that "cows is cows." Figures will not lie whether on a notebook or a pair of scales and nowadays it is results that count.

In one culture club in a section of a dairy state it was found that 500 cows averaged a yield of 3576 pounds of milk per cow a year; while in another section two herds, one of 45 and the other of 43 cows, averaged 3771 pounds and 4169 pounds per cow, respectively, a difference of 67,152 pounds of milk in favor of the smaller herd, or 1798 pounds per cow. In another section a dairyman was getting something over 127,000 pounds of milk from 26 cows and a neighbor milking 45 cows, but a little more than 124,000 pounds. The cost of the feed and care was the same. The moral is that the herds to be profitable must be weeded out and the non workers sent to the slaughter house.
