HAD A "TERRIBLE" TIME.

But Finally Made the "Rifle" at Midnight.

Deer Creek Bridge Cause of Much Anxiety.

"Did you abandon the idea of changing Jackson street in its direction as advertised in yesterday's News?" asked our representative of One Who Was There.

"Why, no," The One Who Was There answered in surprise. "We changed it all right; it was great! Why wasn't you there? A real live reporter would have been."

Our representative mentioned something about sickness in the family, and then asked for details.

"Do you know," The One Who Was There began blowing a thin blue curl of tobacco smoke into the air, "there is more to a proposition like that than one would at first blush think for, very much more. There were things that we had never considered—but I'll tell you about that as we go along."

The reason for our wanting to change the direction of Jackson street was because of the sheer monotony of having it run north and south without making much headway in either direction. It is true it did make a little jog in another direction when it had to pass Mr. Herman's barn, and for a while our hope beat high only to be dashed to the ground again for no reason had it circled the barn than it went off again in a southerly direction like a northern zephyr and got lost somewhere out by where the base ball park used to be. Then it couldn't go much farther north even with all of Mr. Creason's Alaskan experience brought to bear upon it, he can't get it over the hill that still blocks the way.

"So with these things in mind and the forever monotony of seeing the McClallen House bus make its way up Jackson and down Cass, we thought it best to change it."

"We had arranged to change it with the beginning of the New Year, as it would probably cause less disturbance during the general melee. And as the streets are usually deserted at night it would be far easier to do when Old Man Time was handling the Little Fellow the pass key to the front door."

"While we waited the birth of the glad New Year, the little bunch of us that could get away from our work untroubled with the shades of evening at the club, and while we waited we consorted with kings and queens and kept ourselves awake with various trials of skill and strength—one man held a full house—he was the most envied prize winner of the evening. At 12 o'clock we had all the wood, even to the last chip, put away when the bells rang merrily."

"This was our signal for changing Jackson street around the compass and every man hastened to the station assigned him. At the crack of a pistol every man bent to his task. At first the street moved very slowly but once loosened it was an easy matter to put it where we wanted it. At first we turned it so that the North Jackson end headed for the Soldiers' Home, but much to our annoyance the Deer Creek bridge would only reach half way across the Umpqua. Fortunately those who were crossing and fell off in the middle of the river didn't get wet."

"Didn't get wet?" our correspondent inquired in surprise.

"Why, no," was the answer. "How could they in a dry town?"

Then he continued: "Some of the bunch met some of the old veterans going out to their home and they asked the old boys if they were not surprised to see the streets turning round. They said no, they were used to it—sometimes the street would fly up and hit them in the face."

"You ought to have seen the fellows that we sent out to guard the extreme ends of the street—they come in all covered with mud and dirt. They said the street went so fast that they were dragged along much after the manner of a can to a dog's tail. Oh! it was a great time, everybody enjoyed it."

"But the street is just the same this morning as it always was, our representative remarked tentatively.

"Sure, we had to get it back. You see there were so many things we had not counted on. The who got in the habit of rolling down hill home of nights couldn't get it up the new hills, and there were lots of other kinks like that. We might have overcome these obstacles had it not been for one thing. One change we made brought the lady who holds down the W. C. T. U. fountain at Main and Cass down where the brewery usually stands. This brought a curious phenomenon—instead of pouring forth the cold, raw, unstill, uncheerful North Umpqua, there was a nice, rich, foamy almost near beer flowing—well you can imagine what the consequences would have been had we left it like that, so we had to change poor old Jackson back as she ran in the days of her youth."

Then the One Who Was There started away, he said over his shoulder.

"Say, it was great; you really ought to have been there. Jackson looks over so much better east and west."

HOW THE INDIANS HEALED THEIR SICK

Hundreds of Years Before the White Man Thought Such Methods Wise.

The American Indian is the craftiest, most reasoning and deepest student of nature of all barbarians or semi-barbarians people.

He knows more about the secret of nature, his history shows a richer touch of natural law than even the legends of the Syrian or Caucasian races.

Especially interesting is the study of the Indian and his methods for curing his sick. In addition to his wonderful knowledge of plants and the mixing of it to bring forth health concoctions, the Indian is said to be the first race to study the value of mineral water baths. Long before the chemists and alchemists of Europe had analyzed the waters of their famous springs and found medicinal properties there, the North American Indian was curing his sick at Paso Robles Hot Springs.

The old Franciscan monks, while making their wonderful journeys, building their missions and teaching Christianity along the California coast, frequently sat at the Indian council camp fires and heard there he tales of a wonderful spring wherein to bathe was to be made free from disease.

These tales seemed unholy worship and nonsense to the holy fathers, but at length they too caught the enthusiasm of the Indian and their sick began the pilgrimage to Paso Robles (The Pass of the Oaks), so named by these holy men.

Then began a series of reports to the papal home of the church and to the King of Spain, so that early in the reign of Castile over California these springs were regarded as the ideal spot sought for by Ponce de Leon.

But aside from the romance of the Indian and from holy reports of the Franciscan monks, Paso Robles today is making fame for her waters by reason of its wonderful cures.

Rheumatism, goat, kidney and stomach, troubles disappear before the bath treatments at Paso Robles so quickly that the citizens of Paso Robles claim no case can be severe enough to defeat the waters from making a cure. Tuberculosis and unclean diseases are not permitted treatment.

Nervous women who have been cured of all manner of female ills, form a continual series of testimonial proof of the beneficial effects of Paso Robles springs.

Here one meets the worn out laborer praising the waters for their gifts to him, while at his side perhaps speaks the clubman from the city, whose living has worn down his system.

Many health pilgrims arrive at Paso Robles with camping outfits and live in tents while being cured, being unable to afford the luxury of a boarding house.

Here also are the rich in their luxurious hotel with private bath house and all the special attention they demand. The air of Paso Robles is as rich and as perfect as its water, this fact alone being of greatest benefit to its curing power.

A small book, neatly illustrated, has been recently published by the management telling the story of the Hot Springs in a most interesting manner and giving complete information. Send for it, either to Wm. McMurray, general passenger agent of the O. R. & N., Portland, Or., or Dr. F. W. Sawyer, manager, Paso Robles, Cal.
