Last Friday Lee Allen, Art Wagner, Bud and Ed Moore took three horses, a camp outfit, some saws and other implements of forestry and headed for Bear Springs where they intended to build a homesteader's cabin. Arriving at their destination the quartet of carpenters busied themselves about camp and after partaking of a liberal supply of bacon, beans and such things as they had, were about to set out in quest of a suitable location for their mountain mansion when one of the party noticed a saddle blanket smoldering, having been caught on fire by a spark from the campfire and proceeded to extinguish the fire, which he succeeded in doing, so he thought.

The next move was to pile all the equipment, consisting of three saddles, three bridles, bedding, tent and provisions up against a tree for safe keeping, after which the party struck out to reconnoiter. Returning an hour later they were terribly surprised and chagrined to find that every vestige of equipment had gone up in smoke and all that remained to tell the tale was the smoldering fragment of a saddle blanket and a trio of blackened bridle bits.

But for the fact that there is plenty of green foliage in the vicinity of Bear Springs, the poor unfortunates would doubtless have gone hungry, but with plenty of brousing with dried rabbit tracks for dessert, they managed to make it into Skelley.

The loss is estimated at $85.00.
