DARROW'S TELLING ADMISSIONS

The Liquor Men Were Knocked Out By Their Own Champion

Not only are the great labor leaders of the country, like John Mitchell and Gompers, in favor of prohibition, but Clarence Darrow, in his speech at Roseburg, for the "wets", was honest enough to admit the following facts, which men like Rose deny, namely:

1. That the prohibitionists are honest and unselfish, and are trying to make the world better.
2. That many of the "wets" are fighting prohibition simply because they have money invested in the liquor business.
3. That prohibition speakers can beat the "wet" speakers; that "wet" speakers do not dare to enter into joint debates with prohibitionists.
4. That no enthusiasm can be aroused for a glass of beer.
5. That the question is not one of revenue. Darrow says he would be ashamed to discuss the revenue side of it, and thinks if the selling of liquor is wrong any town ought to be ashamed to get rich at it.
6. That neither whiskey nor beer is a food.
7. That drink is unnecessary, does no one good, and shortens life.
8. That prohibition does cut down the use of liquor, and that it is not true that more liquor is sold under prohibition than under the license system.

These are the statements and admissions of Clarence Darrow, the greatest socialist and criminal lawyer of Chicago, who is reported to have received five hundred dollars for his lecture at Roseburg. The people who paid Mr. Darrow that handsome sum of money for that lecture have been saying just the opposite of what Mr. Darrow says. Some of them did not care for the truth because their business interests were at stake. Now that a man of Mr. Darrow's ability has told them the truth, will they "be good"?

Before we had local option in Oregon it was often proposed in different towns of the state that the city council might, under the authority of the city charter, close up the saloons and prohibit the sale of liquor. This proposal was always met by saying that if the liquor business were stopped within the corporate limits the saloon man would simply go into business outside of those limits and the town would suffer all the evils of the liquor traffic the same as though it were carried on within its borders. There was a great deal of common sense in this objection, and it was not until the local option law came into force that the liquor traffic could be banished from the town with any effect, and this is because under the local option law, the surrounding territory is yoked up with the town, and if the town and the surrounding territory are both dry, then of course, there can be no legal sale of liquor therein. Under the proposed "Home Rule" plan, however, which is expressly gotten up for the purpose of enabling each town to carry on the liquor business whether the surrounding country is willing or not, if a town should vote dry and even if every man, woman and child within the corporate limits wanted the town dry, a few people could easily colonize a small district adjoining the limits of the town and incorporate as a town and put the saloon business into operation, and thus absolutely overcome the dry sentiment of the real town. Of course, "Home Rulers" do not expect to let the towns vote "dry" if their scheme becomes a law, but should any town vote "dry" under their system, the will of its citizens can be absolutely defeated by starting a fake town immediately adjoining. This is too plain for argument.
