MOOSE HEAD BORE NO TAG.

Can one legally hold possession of an untagged head of a moose which was lawfully killed? This is the text of Hanson vs. Story, 131 Northwestern Reporter, 481. Plaintiff lawfully killed a moose in the hunting season of 1908, and during the open season he skinned the neck and severed the head. The carcass remained in his possession for more than five days after the close of the hunting season. Neither the moose nor any part thereof, was at any time tagged, nor was any permit ever obtained. In 1909 the head was sent to a taxidermist to be mounted. A few days after its delivery it was seized and tagged as the property of the state by a game warden, acting under a statute which provides for tagging game, and that while the tags remain the game may be kept in possession until consumed. Action was brought to recover possession of the value of the head. Defendants concede that a moose hide, whether fresh or dry, taken from a moose lawfully killed, may be had in possession, under the statute, without the tag or permit required, but claim that so to have in possession the head of a moose is a violation of the statute. In this connection, it is suggested that the commercial value of the head with the horns intact is so much greater than the hide as to furnish an inducement for the unlawful killing of moose, and therefore the possession of an untagged head of a moose lawfully killed should be within the prohibition of the statute. The supreme court of Minnesota grants that the contention seems to afford a reason why the statute should be applicable to the case in hand, but holds that it cannot be so construed as to include such prohibition. Therefore the possession of an untagged head of a moose, lawfully killed, is lawful.

POEM FOR TODAY.

It Looks Easy.
 On New Year's day we gladly turn
 Our backs upon the wabbling year
 And say its records ought to burn.
 Next year will differ from the last
 We'll get a grand new spotted page
 And figure what were also to write.
 No drunks, no drunks, no breaks of rage;
 Sweetness we'll cultivate and fight
 Economy and self control;
 No more boxwood hats to roll,
 Nor swear words, not a single case.
 Cut out we will the glad free things
 We'll boost salaries and truth
 With all the water wagon blinks
 We'll pile us in our little cots
 From where we stand it looks a cinch
 To walk the straight and narrow way.
 We will not rest until an inch
 It's near. Yes, on New Year's day,
 I'm satisfied.

 "Northcliffe then sent back the message: 'Make censor our correspondent.'
 "And from that day, by Jingo," said the New York man, "Northcliffe's paper had an exclusive war story every blessed morning."—Chicago Record-Herald.
 "There's no rest for the wicked."
 "Well, they don't want any; they'd rather keep at it."—Life.

WELCOME MR. GOEBEL.

What promises to be the most interesting of all the socialist lectures is the last one of their Lyceum course, to be given at the Palace on Friday night at 8 o'clock. The speaker is Mr. George H. Goebel, and his subject "Socialists at Work."
 Both socialists and their opponents will welcome the opportunity to hear something about what the socialists are actually doing, even though it be from a not unprejudiced observer. Naturally, such a whole-sale program of changes as is advocated by their party leaves the socialists little to do but talk until

GEORGE H. GOEBEL.

They shall require a measure of power. What are the socialists doing with their power where they have acquired a limited amount of it? In negotiation have they as yet a majority in the legislative body, though indications are that they soon will have. Preside what changes will they effect in a number of living and the social relations of mankind? In what direction do these changes trend?
 These are important questions, the answers of which concern every human being in the world. Given due allowance to the obvious tendency of the socialist speaker to present the most probably favorable phases of socialist activity, we can all well afford to inquire to what he has to say.
