Woman's World

Woman Artist to Complete

It has come as a surprise to many of the devoted admirers of the late Edwin Abbey to hear that the unfinished work of this master artist is to be taken up by a woman, and a woman who is still to be counted young. But all those who have followed the career of Miss Violet Oakley, the young wo man in question, agree that the choice is a worthy one and that no one available could better carry out the spirit and the form of Abbey's paintings in the Pennsylvania capitol.

Miss Oakley has already done some motable work on the capitol in Harris-burg, as she was commissioned as one of the mura, artists nearly ten years ago, and her series in the governor's room, representing the early history of the state of Pennsylvania, has proved her originality, her poetical conception of the subject and her mastery of technique. This series is in two parts, one treating of the rise of religious liberty, which led to the settling of the state from the Tyndale Bible pe riod to Fox's vision of a multitude, and the other depicting the life of William Penn, showing his youth at Oxford, his conversion to the sect of the Friends. his arrest and imprisonment, his vision Philadelphia.

That Miss Oakley is recognized not as a poor substitute for Mr. Abbey, but as a sister artist, is indicated commercially by the fact that she is to be paid exactly the amount promised to the late painter—a rate of $50 a foot.

Miss Oakley was born in New Jersey but spent a large part of her earlier life in New York city. It was there that she first studied art, taking lessons in the Art league, working for awhile un der Carroll Beckwith and then going abrond to study further. As masters she had Raphael Collins and Aman Gean at the Academie Montparnasas and Charles Lasar in Sussex. At the and of a year she returned to America and studied at the Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia, and it is in Penn-sylvania that she has done some of her most successful work. For long ber name was associated with those of Jessie Wilcox Smith and Elizabeth Shippen Green, as the three started a pleturesque little art colony near Villa-nova, a suburb of Philadelphia, where they transformed a quaint old inn into a studio.

There is in the Woman's Home Companion a very personal article about Germany's crown princess. Cecilie. Germany's crown princess, Cecilie, who is twenty-five years old and has been the wife of the crown prince for six years. She has four children. Fol-lowing ta a brief extract from the ar-

"It was a genuine love match, with a wooing as quiet as might have come any day in any walk of life, he offering his heart to her in a little tea house at Murquitz, quite the most humble, unconventional place that any man could have chosen. The beauty of it is that they are even more deeply devoted today and show it with a frankness that people seldom attribute to royalty. Naive are they, too, in this royalty. Naive are they, too, in this aspect, as this story, told me by a sing er who witnessed the show. She happened to be singing at a musicale at the Marble palace, the home of the crown prince and princess in Potsdam. When she had finished he, leaning on the plane and looking at her with a boyish smile, said, 'Cecille sings too.' Presently a noted violinist sings too. Prescrity a noted violinar gave his port in the program, and the crown princess, going over to the same singer, said. 'Willy pays the violin too'. Neither had known of the confided compliment to the other. It was merely a little coincidence of apontaneous pride and mutual affection."
