The Man That Figured
By M. QUAD
Copyright, 1912, by Associated Literary Press.

It was a May day when the man that gave his name as Ezekiel Harper arrived in the village of Oakville and told the landlord of the tavern that he wanted rest and might stay for a couple of months.

At the end of three weeks the village constable, the justice of the peace, the leading merchant and others had a sort of meeting at which it was resolved that a stranger that wouldn't tell all about himself was probably hiding from the law. This resolution was handed to Mr. Harper by the constable, and after reading it two or three times the newcomer carelessly said:

"I kinder want a rest and I kinder want to figger something out."
"But we don't like it. We don't like it," announced the man of the law.
"Well, I dunno what you are going to do about it."
Neither did the constable nor anybody else. Mr. Harper paid his board every Saturday night in good and lawful money, and if he was a fugitive from justice he didn't do any skulking. Soon after he had been told what the public thought of him he bought a tape-line at one of the stores. Of course the clerk that sold it to him asked him what he was going to do with it, but Mr. Harper refused to give out any information whatever. This nearly resulted in another public meeting. But for the fact that the man was seen measuring the distance from the schoolhouse to the bridge the meeting would have been held and at least three different resolutions adopted.

And the next day Mr. Harper measured the distance between the tavern and a mudhole a hundred feet away.

A day elapsed. It was spent by Mr. Harper in figuring, and he took great care that his figures should not be seen by others. Deacon Smythe had at ways had great good luck in pumping strangers, and he was called upon to exercise his talents on the man of mystery. He took a seat beside him on the tavern veranda and began:

"Mr. Harper, this town of Oakville is inhabited by plain people."
"Yes."
"We have nothing to conceal."
"No."
"Then I shall expect you to answer a few questions concerning yourself. Where do you come from?"

"I believe they call the place Hades row, but that hasn't changed the temperature any."
"Sir! Sir! This to me!" shouted Deacon Smythe.
"Please don't bother me—I want to figger."
When it became known how Deacon Smythe had been turned down that second public meeting was held. The resolutions were bold and red hot. The landlord must give Mr. Harper notice to quit. He must also make oath as to what suspicious things he had observed. Mr. Harper must tell why he came to Oakville instead of stopping at Mount Ivy. He must also make a clean breast of the tape-line and measuring affair. If not—But he must. The committee named proceeded to the hotel and reached the place just as Mr. Harper returned from measuring the distance between the cooper shop and the frog pond.

"Sir!" said the undertaker, who was chairman by virtue of having the deepest voice. "We must know all about you or there will be consequences. For one thing the landlord will turn you out."
"Then he'll get a suit for damages!" was the reply.
"But, sir, it is a consensus of opinion that you are a—"
"Suspicious character?"
"Yes—ah—yes. Yes, sir, that is it."
"Thanks. Tomorrow I will begin suit against each and every one of you."
That shot told. The committee left and the landlord had nothing to say, and for three days men shivered when they thought of damage suits. Then Mr. Harper packed his trunk and left. In leaving he placed a written explanation in the landlord's hands to be read to all interested parties. It read as follows:

"The distance from the schoolhouse to the bridge is just 299 feet and 7 inches. What I was figuring on was the distance it would be if about forty old sooters and lazybones in this town had to let whisky alone and go to work."
"The distance between the tavern and the mudhole down the street, which has been a mudhole for forty years, is just ninety-seven feet and four and a half inches. I was figuring on how a shovelful of that mud would get into the coffee-pot every morning at breakfast."
"The distance between the cooper shop and the frog pond is exactly 234 feet and 1 inch. What I was figuring on was how much less it would be if all the buffings came ashore and helped the people of the town to poke their noses into knotholes to try to find out other people's business."
"I was going to measure the distance between Squire Hampton's spotted dog and Deacon Smythe's onion bed, but not wishing the community to suffer agony I have determined to take my departure."
The above explanations went from man to man and from house to house, and every man and woman was mean enough to say:

"There, didn't I tell you he was all right, but you were just flat enough to differ with me?"

How He Felt.
"You seem rather flushed this morning," said the druggist.
"Yes; I took two bottles of your medicine."
"And you feel like a new man."
"I do. To prove it I am going to lick the man who sold it to me. Off with your coat!"
