The dairy sire is said to be half of the herd, but if he is a poor sire he is more usually 99 per cent of it.

Sprinkling cabbages with buckwheat flour is recommended by one gardener who has tried it as an effective means of ridding them of the green worms.

There is no farm animal that yields as much per day as the cow. This indicates that the cow must be liberally fed, for it is impossible to get large milk returns from an underfed cow.

The hens will get through the molting process the more quickly if they are kept on rather scant feed for several weeks and then put on a quite full feed in which nitrogenous elements predominate.

Many a case of lockjaw or blood poisoning might be averted if cuts and bruises on hands and feet were treated at once by sopping them with hydrogen peroxide. This chemical causes no pain, yet is a most effective disinfectant.

All of the wood ashes from the kitchen stove, where wood is still used, should be mixed with a like volume of road dust and put in a good sized box in the hen yard. It won't take the hens long to catch on why it was placed there.

There is no need of printed announcements that the wild west show has come and gone, for during the week immediately following its visit to the community all the small boys in the neighborhood invariably try their hand at assailing each other in the back alley.

Dairymen on a town lot may not sound like the most profitable kind of work, but it has proved a blessing to many. The herd will not naturally be large, but even one cow can be made to pay and furnish the family an abundance of good, wholesome food.

A poultry keeping domicile of Yonkers, N. Y., is reported as saying that a man has three duties—the first to his family, the second to his chickens and the third to his church. He puts chickens before church because he believes if he can interest a man in chickens he can get him to church.

The heavy yield of straw in the small grain fields of the great north and northwest has precipitated a twine famine the like of which has not been noted in years. Factories are running night and day, and in spite of this it seems likely that many a field of grain will have to be cut and stacked as hay.

If any one of the several kinds of sorrel is found growing on a piece of land it is pretty safe to assume that the soil is sour and needs sweetening with an application of lime. Besides this, it may be that the tract is not properly drained, in which case it should be tiled in addition to being sweetened.

The young horse should be halter-wise at one year old. Several weeks before hitching or driving let him stand in the stall with an old harness on. Let him know the harmlessness of every jangling buckle or chafing or happing strap. Give him a bit, too, to play with and to discover that it has one to stay.

The nests of the tent caterpillars should be broken up and the colony of worms destroyed before they scatter and make nests for the winter. If the nests are small they may be easily destroyed by singeing them with a torch made of a kerosene rag attached to a pole. If the nest is large and the worms are lusty it is better to cut the limb out on which the nest is located and, after collecting, to burn them.

In nature there seems to be a constant tendency to effect an adjustment of means and conditions to ends. This is nicely shown in a fertile field growing a scant stand of corn, in the habit of the growing plants to suck up and more fully occupy and utilize the fertilizing elements contained in the soil. In case of an overstand the tendency is shown in the reverse direction, when many stalks fail to set ears, thus reducing the yield.

The state of health in man or animal at any given time seems to depend quite largely upon whether the wholesome microbes that inhabit the system are superior or inferior in point of numbers and vitality to the harmful microbes that are trying to establish headquarters there; hence keeping in good health seems to have resolved itself into maintaining those conditions in which the good microbes can knock the stuff out of the bad ones.
