Two Striking Scenes In New York's Labor Day Procession

Photos by American Press Association.

LABOR'S annual parade in New York was chiefly noteworthy for the large part taken by strikers. The union which was most largely represented was that of the workers in fur, 40,000 of whom were on strike. The sand and excavation teamsters, also strikers, displayed many banners with such mottoes as "No Sunday Work Without Pay" and "Shorter Hours and a Living Wage." Many women were in the procession, which numbered about 25,000. Two who attracted much notice were the cornettists of one of the bands pictured in the lower of the two illustrations. The upper shows the head of the furriers' division, with one of the banners expressing sympathy with the strikers and pledging assistance.
