CANOING more than any other form of water sport possesses for those who do not cultivate it an element of the mysterious. It is uncanny, in the eyes of the man accustomed only to rowboats, for a fat Indian squaw to step into a flimsy birch bark as carelessly as a white woman steps into her carriage. But the squaw has full command of all her muscles and balances herself instinctively. So the shooting of rapids and falls in canoes is simple when you know how to do it. But such a "stunt" as that portrayed in the photograph, which was taken at the falls of the Wissahickon in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, is unusual enough to excite

Prince Olav of Norway, Who May Some Day Be a King.

The handsome young gentleman whose portrait is printed above is the crown prince of Norway. Unless we were told that he possessed so high sounding a title most of us would say, "Why, that is only the picture of a little boy!" And that is all he is so far, but some day he may be king of Norway. In our democratic country every boy is born a crown prince—that is, he is a potential president. When he grows to be a man his fellow citizens may choose him to govern this great nation. Not so in Norway and all other monarchies. The future king is born to the position, no matter whether he possess ability or lack it. Of course our way is the best, for worth, not birth, is the test we apply to our presidents. Little Olav is nine years old. He is the son of King Haakon VII., second son of the late king of Denmark, His mother, Queen Maud, is a daughter of the late King Edward VII. of England.

Concerning Metals.
England has been always famous for her mines of tin, called "anna" formerly. Some think the name Britannia is derived from it, meaning tin island. Forty years B. C. Diodorus writes about the way in which the Cornish mines were worked. Tin is easily melted and is very soft. It has great affinity for mercury and is used, when so combined, for the back of mirrors. Tin and lead make the plumber's solder; tin enters largely into bell metal and pewter, and it is used by dyers for giving a permanence and brightness to their red colors. Zinc has not been long known. So little indeed was it valued that the Welsh people long used its ore for mending their roads. It is used now in making brass, pinblack and bronze. Brass is made of three parts copper and one of carbonate of zinc or calamine. And, though zinc readily rusts, yet it keeps the copper in the brass from being tarnished.

Sudden Departure.
This game will be enjoyed by young or children. They must stand in a ring with hands clasped, all except one, who approaches from outside the circle and pleads:
"It snows and it blows, and it cuts off my nose,
So pray, little girl, let me in,
To light my pipe and warm my toes,
And then I'll be gone again."
He is admitted to the circle and proceeds to go through with the actions mentioned. After "lighting his pipe and warming his toes" he suddenly attempts to leave the ring by dashing against the hands that have been tightly clasped in expectation of his quest. The one whose grips weakens and lets him through must take his place and become the wanderer.

Black Licorice.
Most of the black licorice comes from Spain, where it is made from the juice of the plant and mixed with starch to prevent it from melting in hot weather. The licorice plant is a shrub about three feet high and grows wild where its roots can reach the water. It grows largely on the banks of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers. As the valley of the Euphrates contained one of the earliest civilizations in the world, it is probable that licorice is about the oldest confection in the world and that the taste which our little boys and girls like so well today was enjoyed by the little bronze boys and girls of Babylon and Nineveh 3,000 years ago.

The Pearly Ghosts.
Last night I had a happy dream—
I dreamt all the way—
Huge rows and rows of pearly teeth
And beautiful smiling faces.
They looked at me with silent joy,
I thought I heard them say:
"By night we haunt the toothy boy,
That haunts us each by day."
"Bathed in cream & cinnamon grease—
You'd better slide your heels—
And then you'll be all right and blue,
So never grow to get the blues."
"We never sleep & never dream—
A life of toothache, woe,
You see how quiet it is here,
And we don't even sneeze!"
—St. Nicholas.
