While returning to Roseburg from Paulina, M. C. Hayes and P. E. Freydlig, O. A. C., hiked 150 miles through dense forests which had never been surveyed and each one of them carried a pack weighing 25 pounds. While in the forest on the headwaters of the Umpqua river they became lost for two days in the dense underbrush and were nearly "all in" when they finally reached Roseburg. While gone the men made a preliminary survey for a wagon road from Crescent to Crater Lake. Mr. Hayes stated that the majority of the land was unfit for agricultural purposes with a heavy growth of Douglas fir, yellow sugar pine timber.—Albany Democrat.
