FIRST OREGON LAND SHOW.

For the first time, the Pacific Northwest will have a land show this winter. Located at Portland, it will be a full fledged exposition of soil products. County and district fairs using specimens of soil from Oregon, Idaho, Washington and Montana will send their best exhibits and competition promises to be taken for the attractive prizes offered. The event bears the name of The Pacific Northwest Products Show and the dates are November 18-23.

The land show has come to be a recognized institution in this country. It has proved successful in the East and Middle West where its chief use is to point the land-hungry people of those sections to the vacant lands of the West; they afford a chance to show the Easterner what the West is doing.

It seems that a little of this education will not be amiss here at home. There are any number of city people in Portland and other Northwest cities who have a longing to get into the soil and the Portland sky-scrapers are full of office workers who cherish the hope that some day, sooner or later, they will have some land of their own on which they can grow some of the things for which the Northwest is famous. If it accomplished nothing else, the land show would serve a useful purpose by pointing these people to the soil.

But it will do more than that; its chief value, probably, will be in the benefit exhibitors will get from the interchange of ideas and the spreading of knowledge of the best methods in agriculture and fruit growing. The rivalry for prizes will put exhibitors on their mettle and those making the best showing will have plenty of opportunity to tell all about how they succeeded in growing the prize products.

To the beginner in agriculture, especially, this phase of the show will be a valuable one, and the people of Portland, as a whole, will find the show an object lesson in what the farmers of the Pacific Northwest are doing. It is bound to stimulate an interest in the soil among all classes.

Colonist rates from the east, in effect for a short time this Fall, will bring many newcomers to the Northwest and these people will find just what they are looking for at this show. A visit to the show will be of great assistance to them in making up their minds in what part of the Northwest they want to locate, for they will see the products of the various sections and will be able to learn a great deal about lands and prices without going to the trouble and expense of a personal inspection of each district.

Premiums at the show will amount to $20,000. These range from awards for the best plates of apples up to more substantial prizes for the best district display of vegetables or the best district display of fruits. Taking the place, as it does, of the usual apple show of the Oregon State Horticultural Society, under whose auspices the land show will be given, the event will naturally place considerable emphasis on fruit, but its scope is broader than that. Every product of the soil in the four states will be displayed.

The name of the grower may be placed on each exhibit. The management of the show has entire confidence in the judges who will award the prizes, and the growers will be given the benefit of all the advertising possible.

A pleasant feature of the land show will be a restaurant operated by the Domestic Science Department of the Oregon Agricultural College. The young ladies will cook and serve appetizing meals and both morning and evening lectures and demonstrations in domestic science will be given.

The show will be held in the Moline Plow Company building at East First and Morrison streets. This is close to the business center of Portland and is entirely suitable for an affair of this kind.

PIANO BARGAIN.

On account of my removal to Portland, I will sacrifice my new $400 piano for $300. Also one $17 refrigerator for $8. One good $13 writing desk for $8.50. Piano will be sold for one-half cash, remainder to be paid in installments. To secure these bargains it will be necessary to apply at 120 Lane street not later than Monday noon. Phone 82-Y.

LOCAL NEWS.

Miss Virgil Dyer, of Myrtle Creek, was a visitor in Roseburg for a few hours today.

I. B. Riddle, court reporter, returned here last evening after attending court in Coos county.

Dr. Callaway returned here this afternoon after a couple of days spent at Riddle and Canyonville.

Mrs. Rilla Gallier, of Bandon, arrived in Roseburg this morning for a visit with friends.

D. M. Davis, returned home to Portland today, after a week's visit here with his sister, Mrs. Lloyd Adams.

G. W. Robinson, one of Riddle's best known farmers, spent the day in Roseburg attending to business interests.

One of the nicest afternoon was the suffrage tea given by the Equal Suffrage Club yesterday afternoon at the Parish house. The rooms were tastefully decorated with yellow pennants with the words, votes for women adorned the walls. Anna Bell Denn and Florence Wharton gave several piano selections that were very much enjoyed. The vocal solos by Miss Ellen Flook and Miss Holderman were sweet and a delight to all. Hazel Henkle gave a very appropriate reading "Why Elmiria Wanted to Vote". Mrs. O. H. Porter, in her able manner, gave two beautiful readings. Refreshments were served during the afternoon. Those who assisted were Mesdames Cardwell, Wharton, Barnes, Hoover, Willet and Perry. Much interest was shown in the coming of Dr. Anna H. Shaw. Great interest is being taken in Portland and Eugene where she is to be prior to coming here. Her broad experience and rare ability as an orator are seldom found.
