WHAT A CRACK DID

By SADIE OLCOTT

Bernard Ellsworth, the only son of wealthy parents, and Susie Pixley were playmates. When they grew up Bernard went to another field for awhile and during his absence corresponded with Susie. Whether or no it was absence, he discovered that he wanted her. Her parents were in rather straitened circumstances at the time, and this caused the young man to think that the question between him and Susie was, should he, who would inherit wealth, marry a girl who had not even prospects? He wanted her badly enough to make the pecuniary sacrifice, but considered that Susie, under the circumstances, should feel highly flattered.

Before his return he wrote her a long letter which he considered contained a lot of good sense, ending with a proposition of marriage. When the letter was delivered Susie was out. The postman handed it to a maid, who left it on a mantel with a crack in it, and—perhaps it was the modesty natural to a love letter—it slipped down into the crack out of sight. When Susie came in the maid told her that a letter had come for her, and she was going to get it when fate stepped in to play one of those tricks so common in the affairs of man and woman kind. There came a ring at the telephone, followed by a summons for Susie. The summons kept her away all night, and the next day her little brother was taken very ill, so that the matter slipped her mind.

When Bernard returned he did not go to see her, and when she learned that he had been at home a week without calling she was surprised. It did not seem that there was anything to do in the matter. She was unconscious of having done anything to offend him and, being sensitive, fancied that he might have met his fate while away and thought it best to break off all intimacies with other girls. Perhaps she would meet him and the matter would be explained.

But that fate which had started the misunderstanding kept it up. A number of times Bernard and Susie were within a hundred feet of each other without coming in contact. Once she saw him crossing a street, but since he was not facing her he did not see her or, if he did, pretended he didn't. They were under the same roof at social gatherings twice, but the little bump that fate set to keeping them apart contrived that they should not be in the same room at the same moment.

Then one morning Susie took up a newspaper to see under large headlines a notice of the failure of the Ellsworth company, incorporated, of which Bernard's father was president and owner of the majority of the stock.

The day after this announcement Bernard, who was sunk in despondency consequent upon the family misfortune, received a letter from his old friend Susie offering him her sympathy. One would suppose such a letter coming at such a time would be received in the spirit with which it was sent. But Bernard considered himself to have been badly treated—snubbed, in fact—at receiving no reply to his letter offering himself, and the epistle he now received seemed to be adding insult to injury. He tossed it in a wastebasket without reply.

Then fate, still bent on playing its little game, brought about another element to complicate matters. Susie and her father, who had long been keeping his family in straitened circumstances by trying to market inventions, succeeded in getting capital for the production of an electrical machine which made every one even remotely connected with it rich. Mr. Pixley had secured a nice block of the stock in payment for organizing the company, and it became a fortune.

But one thing prevented Susie from being happy in her family's altered fortune. She would have liked to make her old friend Bernard happy in some pecuniary way that was rather vague in her inexperienced mind.

Then fate, having got the matter into as bad a snarl as possible and having turned things completely upside down, instructed its lap to undo everything that had been done. The house the Pixleys lived in was very much run down and it was decided to make the necessary repairs and improvements. One morning when mechanics were tearing everything to pieces a workman who had just pulled down a mantel handed Susie a letter. She recognized Bernard Ellsworth's handwriting and at once opened it. Since it was a long epistle she took it to a portion of the house that had not yet been disturbed and read it.

What a mess had been made by a bit of a crack behind a mantel! And why should it have required a tearing up of the house to straighten the matter out? Why hadn't Bernard told her what he had done and what she had not done? But, on the other hand, why had she not made inquiries of him as to what was the trouble? Then a flash of pleasure came to her at remembering that when that letter was written Bernard was rich and she was poor, while now the conditions were reversed.

The next morning young Ellsworth received a reply to an offer of marriage made a long while before, explaining the delay and accepting the proposition. There was nothing for him to do but abide by his offer, which he was very much pleased to do.

Then fate went off to attend to other odd schemes.
