After one of the most entertaining, as well as instructive educational meetings in the history of Roseburg, the teachers' institute for Douglas county ended here late Friday after a three days' session. Friday's sessions were well attended and the several numbers on the program were greatly appreciated. In all, the institute has proven an event of great educational value and has had the effect of cementing a close relationship between the instructors of the entire county. The addresses, which were delivered by some of Oregon's foremost educators, were well chosen and found favor at the hands of the assemblage. Although crowded to their capacity, the local hotels handed the visiting teachers without the least difficulty.

Attorney George Neuner left for Salem yesterday where he will appear before the Supreme Court in the case of the State vs. Walter Scott, appealed from the circuit court of Douglas county. Scott was indicted here several months ago on a charge of attempted extortion preferred by A. M. Gallagher, of Deer Creek. At the time of trial the evidence indicated that Scott wrote a letter in which he instructed Mr. Gallagher to place a certain sum of money at a designated spot under penalty of having his home destroyed. Gallagher immediately reported receipt of the letter, to the officers, according to the evidence, and suspicion later pointed toward Scott who was formerly employed by Gallagher. Gallagher was then arrested and tried with the result that he was convicted. Although the letter received by Gallagher was unsigned handwriting experts claimed that it was written by Scott. Scott was sentenced within a few days following the trial, at which time his attorneys filed notice of appeal to the supreme court. District Attorney George M. Brown conducted the prosecution, and will probably appear in opposition to Attorney Neuner on the date set for arguments before the supreme court.
