Woman's World

Women of the Balkan Countries Now at War.

PRINCESS ALICE OF GREECE.

While manhood all over the earth watching eagerly the contest in eastern Europe womankind is giving a sign of sympathy for the thousands of homes, the tens of thousands of women suffering the inevitable horror and worries of war-time. But the are a low class of women, one says ignorant, dull, uninspiring and incapable of suffering "as we suffer," but still deserving of better things. Of all the women concerned—the Turkish, the Greek, the Bulgarian, the Serbian, the Montenegrin—possibly less is known about the last named than any of the others. What would the most advanced advocates of women's rights say if they knew that the despised Montenegrin women are having a very real part in this war? What would they say if they heard that it is women who look after the food and the transportation of ammunition? Still the position of the woman of Montenegro is far from enviable. It is no unusual sight to see a gray dressed man strolling riding along with his wife trailing his heels carrying agricultural implements or market products. In some she is not allowed to sit at table with her lord and she may not remain seated if any man, even a stranger, passes by. Thanks to King Nicholas, the first champion of womanhood, authority in Montenegro, much of the case is being abolished.

In Bulgaria a different atmosphere is felt. The general run of women are better educated and keep in touch with the advancement of their sex in other countries. They are even interested in the suffrage question and came very near to winning the vote a few years ago. The Bulgarian women make faithful wives and are busy in the home and in the fields and have a love of elaborate ceremonials, the wedding ceremony holding an important place in their festivals. In the country districts the women still cling to the old beliefs in witches and other evil powers.

Servia is primarily an agricultural country, and the typical Servian is a peasant proprietor. The country has often been referred to "as the peasant's paradise," and certainly there is no real poverty within its borders. Times of peace, but for all that the lives of the women are hard ones. They work side by side with the men in the fields and are held inferior to the lords of creation. Even among the better class there are few luxuries.

By far the most intelligent people of that section of Europe are the Greeks, yet in many parts of Greece the lot of the women is as bad as that of the lowest elsewhere, and in no other of these countries is the contrast of advanced civilization and tradition between education and ignorance so sharply drawn. The Athenian women follow Paris modes in their dress, live broad lives, pursue philanthropic ideals and take part in political problems. But the peasant woman in some of the provinces lives the life of a thousand years ago—her animals in the house and are happy from the talk of men. Greek life is said to be neither oriental nor European; it is something of both.

Voluntaries have been written about the woman of Turkey. Her strange life, the harem is better known and at the same time less known than that of any of her Christianized neighbors. The best position of the Turkish woman is more favorable than that of any other in the world and far better than that of the women in some of our states. The Turkish woman may please her own fancy in any court of law, she may even marry her husband's son to touch it. Her husband may even require us to how she spend her household money, and a certain amount be bound to supply. The very strength of her legal position does make the ordinary Turk to one who is all this possessing in the very midst of their marriage.

Two Greek princesses, Princess Alice, wife of Prince Andrew, fourth son of the King, and Princess Helena, the daughter of the crown prince, are at the front in the Balkan war, patiently caring for the wounded soldiers and enduring much suffering themselves as well. They have a hospital staff

The farms and not the big ranches of the country are to be looked to in the future for the beef supply. The cotton growing states of the south, in addition to the corn belt state, will have a part in furnishing the beef supply for the coming generation.

The farmer who will not take the pains to cure his own hams and bacon really has but little kick coming when he pays what the butcher asks for these products that have been shipped to central markets in the live form and shipped back again as finished product.

A good old friend of the writer who has passed his eightieth milestone told us the other day that not in a period of fifty-five years, in which he has kept track of farm and garden crops, does he remember such bountiful crops along all lines as in the season just closed.

While there is a temptation at times to do it, it is usually unwise to breed dairy animals of the Guernsey or Jersey type to Holsteins, or vice versa. While individuals of such a violent cross might be excellent dairy animals, this result could not be looked for as a general thing.

If the lawn has looked kind of thin and scraggy the past year give it a top dressing of well rotted and rather fine manure. This should be left on until spring, when the coarsest of the litter may be raked off with the litter and returned to the manure pile.

A fashionable woman's magazine that the writer glanced at the other day gave menus of meals for a week for a family of six to cost but $6.50. While it might be possible to keep soul and body together on such a ration, the menus outlined made one gaudy and hungry just to read them over.

Dentists say that one of the great causes of the weakness and early decay of human teeth is that so much of the food consumed is prechewed and predigested that there is nothing much left for the grinders to do, with the result that they get scant exercise and the blood nourishing them does not flow as freely as it should.

An increasing number of northern cattle feeders are using cottonseed meal instead of oilmeal with corn as a fattening ration, and with very excellent results. It can be bought for $32 per ton in car lots and runs as high as 43 per cent in protein content, while the oilmeal costs $35 per ton and contains 10 per cent less protein.

In watering the house plants it is a good idea to vary the usual method of watering by pouring it into the saucer, in which the pots set. As much water as the plant needs will be drawn up by capillary attraction. By the usual method of watering it may happen that the roots in the lower part of the pot may not get as much water as they need.

The fine feature about a tulip bulb is that once planted it lives from year to year. While a bulb should be dug up and small bulbs removed once in three or four years, a lady friend tells us that she has this fall dug up a bulb that has been undisturbed for a period of seventeen years, though the bloom it produced last spring was greatly admired.

Pumpkins make excellent feed for both cattle and hogs and have a feeding value that is from one-fifth to one-seventh that of corn. A feature that adds materially to the practical value of pumpkins is that they furnish a variety and give zest to the appetite for other feeds. This latter feature is also true of turnips, which from the standpoint of food content are much inferior to pumpkins.

At present prices of corn pork can be economically produced, but the cost of feeding, when measuring results secured, can be reduced considerably by feeding one part of tankage with ten parts of corn. A further important fact that has been developed by repeated feeding tests is that hogs fed on the corn tankage ration make one-third faster gains in weight than when fed on corn alone.

It is not a bad mental gymnastic for boys and girls to picture to themselves what they will likely be in a period of from twenty to twenty-five years from now if they should keep on in the direction in which they are at present going. Indulging in such speculation ought to be enough to cause some to take stock of both present achievement and character and take a brace for better things.

While it is a fine thing if the young wife can play a Chopin nocturne or a Beethoven symphony on the new piano, it is lots more conducive to matrimonial felicity if she can bake a nice tin of light biscuits, prepare a toothsome dish of oatmeal or broil a steak so that it is juicy and tender. It's well to possess both these accomplishments, but if either must be lacking it would better be the nocturne and symphony.

Dr. F. N. Myer, one of the expert and fearless scientists of the department of agriculture, has recently set out on a tour in China, where he expects to spend the next three years collecting valuable plant life that may add to the agricultural wealth of the United States. Most of the interval mentioned will be spent in the province of Kansu, which is located in the most northwesterly part of the empire and which has never yet been explored by scientists.
