

READY FOR INSPECTION.

We beg to call the attention of the public to the fact that our annual shipments of trees are now coming in so that within a couple of weeks time we will have the entire assortment ready for your inspection. The constantly increasing patronage of our Nursery Yard has encouraged us to enlarge our already extensive assortment so that there is little chance of not being able to supply our patrons with everything that is well adapted to the Umpqua Valley or Southern Oregon. We have all the standard commercial varieties of Apple, Pear, Prune, Peach and Cherry as well as an extensive assortment of varieties of these fruits for family use. We have all the best varieties of Nectarines, Apricots, Quinces, Almonds, Walnuts, Chestnuts, Pecans and Filberts. Fourteen varieties of Grapes. All kinds of Berry Vines, besides a large assortment of Shade and Ornamental trees

A Cabman's Experience

By EDWIN BRINSLEY

John Burns, taxicab driver, was nodding behind the steering wheel of his vehicle on one of the principal streets of New York. It was nearly midnight and a fine sleet was falling about him. But John Burns was far more interested in catching a nap than in looking upon the marvelous electric display. But soon he heard his cab door open and shut and a man's voice say: "Wake up!" John Burns turned and looked through the glass behind him upon the features of a very old man. The only part of his apparel that was not covered by his cloak was his hat, which struck the cabman as something remarkable. It was what is called bell crown, with a large curled brim and covered with a short fur. The changing electric displays lighted the wearer's face, showing a countenance not only old, but there was an evil twinkle in the eye. "Northward," said the passenger. "On what street?" "The Bloomingdale road." "The what?" "That one." The speaker pointed to Broadway. Cabby put on the power and, turning at the corner, entered that part of Broadway lying north of Forty-second street and now the liveliest part of upper New York. After reaching a less crowded portion of the thoroughfare he asked the old gentleman behind him just where he should take him and received orders to turn into One Hundred and Fortieth street. From that time the passenger kept pointing out the way till he pulled up before an old fashioned house situated among modern edifices. The "fare" opened the cab door and, supporting himself with a staff, tottered up the walk to the front door. From this point John Burns in telling the story appears confused. He doesn't remember whether the house was lighted or in darkness. He can't say that he saw the old man go into the house. His impression is that there were no lights in the windows and if his fare went inside he must have gone right in through the closed door. The only thing John Burns remembers distinctly is that the wind blew aside the man's cloak, which reached to his ankles and exposed a pair of legs no bigger than those of a skeleton. However this may be, the cabman, who, it has been said, was in need of rest, soon began to doze in his seat. He was awakened by a blaze of light coming through the doorway of the house before which he was stopping and saw distinctly two persons there. The one was his passenger, the other a lady. The latter was dressed very much in the present mode of high waist, pautlers and clinging skirts. The man who was bowing himself out flourished his bell crown hat, bowed very low and scraped excessively with his feet. After a number of such caperings, which made John Burns wonder, he came down the walk, turning to throw a kiss to the lady who still stood in the doorway. Then the illumination seemed to go out all of a sudden, and the passenger stepped into the cab, closed the door and said: "Down the Bloomingdale road." Having learned that the Bloomingdale road meant Broadway, cabby asked no questions, but motored southward. He received no order to leave the thoroughfare or to go to any particular place, so he drove on past the junction at Broadway and Thirty-third street and Madison and Union squares and thence straight southward through what is now lower Broadway. The life of the city grew less and less as he proceeded till it became the midnight of a great city. It lived up as they passed the City Hall park, adjoining which most of the newspaper offices linger, but died out as they approached Trinity church, at the head of Wall street. Burns was directed to turn into Rector street, bordering the churchyard on the south. "Stop!" said the stranger. John Burns drew up to the curb. "I am under deep obligations to you," said the passenger in a tone that sounded to John Burns very pompous. "You have taken me to call on my wife at her residence, and I am now going to pay a visit to a gentleman whom I was reluctantly obliged to punish for some annoying remarks he made about me. Good evening." With a flourish of the bell crown hat, in lieu of a fare, the strange man seemed to fit up the side of a stone wall, through an iron railing, and disappeared beneath a monument located but a few feet beyond the rail. Whether John Burns awoke from a dream or was so astonished that he didn't know whether he was asleep or awake he fails to make it appear. As to what he did the next day to clear up the matter he is explicit. He motored up to the dwelling where he had taken the stranger and asked of one passing who lived there. "Don't know," was the reply. "That's the Jumel house. She lived in the early part of the last century and married Aaron Burr in his old age." "Who was Aaron Burr?" "Former vice president of the United States. He killed his political rival in a duel." From the Jumel house John Burns drove to Trinity church and, entering the churchyard, went to the monument overlooking Rector street. On the stone is cut:

IN MEMORY OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON.
