limit. Error was also based upon the admission by the court of evidence of other sales made by the defendant personally to another party. This testimony was afterwards stricken out, and the jury were emphatically instructed to disregard it, which under the circumstances cured the error of the court, if one was committed. "In view of the contention of the defendant that his intent in keeping the beer in his place was an innocent one, the testimony was probably relevant. Whatever may be the rule in other states, we have frequently held that, where the intent or motive of a party in performing an act is involved, evidence of facts tending to throw light upon that intent is admissible, even though it tends to show that the party has committed other offenses. "There were also exceptions to the refusal of the court to give certain instructions requested by the defendant, but so far as such requests were applicable to the case at bar, they were covered by the general charge, and the refusal of others was proper. "It is clear from the evidence that the defendant was absolutely and without question guilty of the offense charged, and the record indicates that he had a fair trial and that the law was fairly and fully given to the jury in the charge of the court."
