With all arrangements practically completed, the turkey shoot to be held at the rifle range north of town tomorrow under the auspices of the Roseburg Gun Club promises to far eclipse all former events of its kind held in this city. Four dozen turkeys have been purchased, and all who attend the shoot will be given an opportunity to participate. Other than the individual and collective shoots there will be a contest between John Enger, a local Southern Pacific dispatcher, and Harry Pearce, the harness manufacturer. Both of these men have been practicing of late, and no one will attempt to predict the result of the match. In fact, Enger claims an easy victory on the grounds his usual averages are much higher than those of his opponent. Pearce, on the other hand, claims supremacy on the grounds that Enger is excitable and loses his control when shooting in a contest such as the one arranged for tomorrow.

Lincoln Wright, an employe of the local gas company, was quite seriously burned about arms and neck this morning while making a gas connection in the residence recently purchased by Mr. Harvey, of the Harvey-Eastman Grocery Company, and situated on Moore street. From what can be learned regarding the affair Mr. Wright had opened the gas jet preparatory to making a connection when the gas ignited from a lighted candle which was stationed nearby. Before he could get away the flames came in contact with his arms and neck with the result that he was badly burned. Although no damage resulted, the flames spread to the woodwork in the basement of the home and a general fire alarm was sounded. The fire ladders responded in haste, but upon arriving at the scene found that the fire had been extinguished. It is not likely that Mr. Wright will be able to resume his duties for several days.
