

WATCH FOR THE CHARITY BALL

Mexican Armored Train Carrying a Machine Gun

The armored train shown in the picture gives an idea of the precautions that the government troops take when going from one point to another. Where the rebels have the railroads they use like methods. This photograph was taken on the Mexican National railroad and shows how an old freight car has been covered with iron to turn hostile bullets. In the doorway is mounted a machine gun, which can either be used against an attacking force from its interior position, or rapidly dragged into the open. On top of the car is a searchlight with which the soldiers sweep the track ahead and the surrounding brush. Attacks on the railroad trains are frequent, and dynamiting troop trains is a favorite pastime of the rebel forces.
