Man in Penitentiary is a Model Prisoner.

People of Colorado Are Interested in the Case of George King, Convicted of Murder—Ejected by Stepfather.

DENVER, Dec. 20.—While people throughout the United States are petitioning the pardon board of the state of Connecticut to give Bessie Wakefield a chance, George King, convict No. 8696, who was given a chance largely through the efforts of Mrs. Helen Grenfel and Mrs. Anna B. Williams, of the state charities and corrections board, is making good in Canyon City penitentiary.

Reared without schooling, beaten by a step-father who hated him and finally driven from his home on a ranch in Elbert county, Colorado, when twelve years old, he was told to make his own living.

He lost his right arm at the shoulder when 16 years old while attempting to do a man's work in a cement plant. George King never had a chance for moral development.

He was sentenced to die upon the gallows for the murder of a hermit, known to have money in his hut. His accomplice was John Field, a boy morally irresponsible, said the court. Mrs. Grenfel personally investigated the history of George King. Since hunger was the primary motive for the crime, she determined to raise money to take his case to the supreme court for a second trial.

Three weeks before the day set for hanging King he overheard the conversation of the prison chaplain with another fellow about going to school in the prison. "I never had much schooling," he broke in. "I wonder if I could learn to read and write before I die."

He was tried a second time and sentenced to life imprisonment. King became the first convict he has ever had in his life of 24 years to show his motto, and he is showing it.

"George King is a model prisoner," said Deputy Warden Jamison. "He is eagerly pursuing his studies in the prison school and ambitious to learn telegraphy. All he needed was human kindness to develop his moral responsibility."

Don't fail to let the children come and see Santa Claus at Seaside Saturday. Go will see it all.
