

RURAL ORGANIZATION.

That rural life should be organized and can be organized is clear. Various agencies are definitely attacking its intellectual side. We are effectively studying rural physical improvements, especially good roads. The country roads are prerequisite for many important rural undertakings. They are prerequisite for better marketing, for better schools, for comfortable living and for the promotion of social life.

There is obvious need of organization for sanitary purposes and for social development. Whether all these shall come through definite attack of private or public agencies or as byproducts makes no difference; they must come. We can no longer entertain the notion that rural life shall remain isolated, disjointed and unorganized. Its organization is a national, economic and social necessity. It is more difficult to organize a scattered rural population than a concentrated one, but the great need is to give the rural population at least approximately the primary advantages which the town enjoys. The town is organized, and because of its organization and of its consequent advantages it has tended to attract to it the most ambitious youth of the country. The task of rural organization is difficult, but as the greatest educator of America has said, "The difficulty of a task constitutes no reason for declining it." And in this way lies the largest promise for national upbuilding and stability.—David F. Houston, Secretary of Agriculture.

BANKERS AID RURAL LIFE.

State and Federal Help Urged In This Direction.

Resolutions providing for changes in the conditions of rural life in this country, which it was stated would decrease the burdens and increase the opportunities of the farmer and his family, were adopted at the third annual meeting of the committee of agricultural development and education of the American Bankers' association.

Vocational training in the public schools, plans to make the marketing of farm products easier and more profitable and federal aid to make farm demonstration work more general throughout the country were among the things urged.

The resolutions in part follow: "Our committee, being especially concerned with agriculture and instruction in that line in the country schools, realizes that it needs and must have the largest measure of aid to the end that the country boys and girls may be placed on an equal footing with those in town. Therefore we urge both state and federal aid in this direction.

"As farm demonstration work through local or country demonstrators has proved to be the most practical and effective means of improving farming methods and as the government has contributed thousands of dollars toward such work in certain states and little or nothing in others, we indorse and earnestly urge legislation on the part of congress that will provide generous federal aid in all the states for such work."

WINTER FEED FOR FOWLS.

An ample as well as a varied supply of green feed to hens during the winter is important for the health of the fowls. The value does not lie in the amount of nutriment it contains, but as an agent in digestion. Fowls eat more when they get green feed than they will when they get only dry feed. It is, however, important to get the right kind of green feed.

Nearly all the winter green feeds are composed of the same few plants. They are not so nutritious as the winter green feeds that are made from a variety of plants. Each bird should get a little of each of these plants. The most nutritious green feed for fowls is made from the following: clover, alfalfa, timothy, and corn. These plants should be cut and stored in a dry place. They should be fed to the fowls in the winter months.
