

FIRST AVIATOR TO FLY WITH HEAD DOWNWARD

Since aviation became possible, and some unsuccessfully. The above aviators have been vying with each other in their flirtation with death. The main object has been to see how nearly they could approach death without actually embracing it. Some time ago the president of the "Safe and Sane Aviators Society" took what he termed a night "joy ride" which proved fatal. Others have done the spiral, the loop-the-loop, the tango, and other sensational aerial manoeuvres, some successfully, and some unsuccessfully. The above photograph shows Charles F. Niles, of New York, who, at Meadow Brook, Long Island, startled the spectators and achieved a new feat in aviation by flying for more than half a mile in a Moissani monoplane head downward. Niles' daring deed had never before been accomplished, or even attempted, by any aviator. He was strapped firmly to his seat, only his arms being free.
