

PAN-AMERICAN FEELING GROWS SINCE WAR, LATIN STATESMEN TELL BURTON

PRESIDENT BENEVIDES and SENATOR BURTON

The high altitude of the Andes possessed no terrors for Theodore E. Burton, former U. S. senator, whose journey down the west coast of South America has been attended by a display of official hospitality on a scale never before tendered a private American citizen.

The senator arrived in Santiago bronzed by the sun of the tropics through which he passed and radiating health and energy, astonishing the English-speaking colony by the manner his physique had withstood the rigors of the mountain country.

The thin air of the tremendous Andean heights, ranging from 10,000 to 15,000 feet above sea level, is itself a physical test which many American travelers find unendurable. But added to the ordinary discomfort of a reduced oxygen supply is the peculiar Andean affliction, soroche, a sort of intensified sea-sickness, which has not infrequently proved fatal to persons of low resistance.

Because of these conditions, Mr. Burton is one of the first Americans of prominence to visit and study the mountain regions of Peru and Bolivia. Neither Roosevelt, Root nor Robert Bacon, on their memorable visits to South America, attempted to go up on the high Andes.

Mr. Burton, however, showed that his exhausting fights against the river and harbor pork barrel bill and the ship purchase bill in the Senate last fall and winter did not weaken his health. He spent two enjoyable weeks in the Andes, studying the regions on which Peru and Bolivia base most of their hopes for prosperity.

He began his mountain experience by ascending the Oroya railroad, which starts from Lima and carries its rails to a point higher than that attained by any other railroad on earth. Later he traveled over two other Andean-piercing railroads, crossing into the upper plateau of Peru at an altitude of 14,866 feet.

He visited Cuzco, ancient seat of Inca civilization, crossed Lake Titicaca, the highest navigable water on earth, and devoted a week to Bolivia, stopping at La Paz, where he was shown many honors by the government. Some of his excursions were on horseback over rough, dizzy trails.

The republics of Peru and Bolivia showed their appreciation of Mr. Burton's interest by entertaining him lavishly. The ministers of these countries in Washington had informed their governments that the former senator is a strong Presidential possibility in the United States and the local administrations spared no effort to make an impression on the guest who might some day deal with them as the head of his nation.

In the many speeches exchanged at the capitals, and in the smaller towns visited by Mr. Burton, the hope was frequently expressed with fervor by the Latins that the European war may result in a strengthening of ties between the United States and the South American republics, and that the manifestation may be a greatly increased South American trade for American manufacturers.

If in "survival of the fittest" when the mess call is sounded and although an attempt is made to keep the boys in two long lines and march to the tables, a wild rush is made when the command "forward march" is given. Some of the boys have strings attached to their forks and when about six feet from the table hurl it into the potato pan and then jerk it back with a spud on the end. Bonnie Buchanan is trying to qualify for big gun pointer on account of his success along this line.

Corp. Delwin Jewett is very much in evidence with the "big voice" when the big guns are being manned and it is said that he can be heard very plainly above the roar of the blast when one is discharged. On account of this he has the doubtful distinction of being called "Bull Moose" Jewett.

The general health of the camp is excellent, due to the vigilance of Lieut. Vincil and Serg. Sheldon and their squad, who make an inspection of the entire camp each morning of all the cook houses, mess tents and living quarters of the troops.

A number of squads of the 4th company are studying hard for first and second class gunners. The captain of the company has promised the squad having the largest number taking the examinations a dinner in Portland and the competition is keen at the present time.

Cook Falbe has the reputation of setting the best table of any of the eight companies, and the boys are well satisfied. The variety is not large, but the food is well cooked and there is plenty of it at all times.

SIDE LIGHTS ON CAMP LIFE

One of the most impressive scenes of the entire day at Ft. Stevens is at six o'clock in the evening when "retreat" is sounded on the bugles. Every company is assembled in front of their quarters and stand at attention while the C. A. C. band plays "The Star Spangled Banner". The post flag is lowered when the band finishes and then the evening gun booms forth.

Every company in camp will be required while they are here to mount guard for one evening. This consists of posting sentries on various beats and having them to patrol until relieved. Guards are changed about every 30 minutes but those 30 minutes seem more like three hours to the "citizen soldier".

Reveille is sounded at 5:45 each morning and fifteen minutes later the "assembly" is heard. One has to turn out, dress and wash in that time. It keeps the boys on the jump to make it, but as not much attention is paid to the toilet at home, but few are late.

Before breakfast each morning each company is put through some form of exercise. The 4th company is usually taken out for a short jog trot over the camp, but as Lieutenant Kernan is not strong on the long run the exercise does not as a rule
