"THE MIDDLEMAN" AT THE MAJESTIC TONIGHT

Joseph Chandler, owner of the Tatlow Potteries, is in serious financial straits. He is informed by his creditors that the potteries must be closed. The closing down of the works will mean the utter ruin of the town, and work people almost mob the pottery office in their desperation, upon learning of the owner's plight. Among Chandler's employees is Cyrus Blenkarn, who discovers a new glaze that is translucent. Realizing that his discovery will revolutionize the industry, he bursts into the office and the creditors, quick to see the possibilities of the discovery, grant Chandler unlimited credit. Chandler has no scruples in taking all the benefit of Blenkarn's discovery and soon becomes rich. Sir Seaton Umfraville, with his daughter, Felicia, makes Chandler's acquaintance and a union between Julian Chandler and Felicia is arranged. Julian is enamored of Mary Blenkarn, and in spite of opposition, a dangerous intimacy springs up between Julian and Mary. Mary, discovering that Julian is about to leave for Africa, can conceal her guilt no longer and leaves, to drown her shame in the dark waters of the Thames.

Blenkarn, whose love for Mary is godly, learns that Chandler's son is responsible for Mary's shame and he vows to be revenged. After months of despair and poverty and while Chandler is again in financial straits, Blenkarn discovers another wonderful glaze, the creditors have closed the Chandler potteries. Blenkarn
