VALLEY OF THE MISSING.

When Harold Brimbecomb's yacht brushes up against a big barge in the fog, Mrs. Brimbecomb finds suddenly thrust into her stateroom from the window of the barge, the tiny form of an infant. A woman's voice from the barge, calls: "Take good care of him. His pop's nigh killed him". He grows to manhood as their son, Everett. The Brimbecombs are neighbors of Floyd Vandecar, whose two children, Floyd and Fledra, were kidnapped in early infancy by Lon Cronk, who had been sent to prison for a long term, by Vandecar, when he was district attorney. Fledra, despite her rough surroundings has grown to lovely womanhood and goaded to desperation by Cronk's cruelty, she and her brother run away. Penniless, footsore and strayed they reach Tarrytown and the home of Horace Shellington, where he lives with his sister Anne. Anne brings the two little vagrants into the house and ultimately adopts them. The subsequent efforts of Cronk, aided by Everett, to regain possession of the children, the thwarting of their plans by Horace Shellington and the final restoration of the long lost twins to their rightful parents, makes the screen story one of the most absorbing and thrilling that you have seen. It is to be shown at the Palace theatre Tuesday and Wednesday.
