The Dyspeptic Who Comes to the Table

We wouldn't mind it if he came with a cheerful face, and ignored the subject of food. But, no air. He comes with a wry face, and the first thing he does is look around to see what he can eat and what will "go against" him. He sits down with a hostile look, and the battle is on—the battle between him and the thing that will make him "deathly sick." Did you see that article in the paper on the President's war "colley"? We throw out desperately, hoping to divert him. A moment elapses before he answers. That moment is heavy with dyspeptic dreads. Then comes his preoccupied voice: "No, I didn't see it. . . . I can't eat these beans. Do you want any?" We wait in our seat. We look at the beans—the beans that can make a man sick. "No!" we answer sharply. The rest of the meal we try to forget him. But as if we could! He is, right beside us, self-satisfied, looking—hard at work. His stomach is up.
