The PEOPLE'S LEGAL FRIEND by E. R. BRANSON

The Heir In A Will. Q. Where the word "heir" is used in a will, what is the legal meaning and effect of the word? A. In the absence of any proof to the contrary, the word will have the same meaning as when used in its ordinary legal sense—that is, it will mean the person who would be entitled, under the law, to inherit the real estate of one who died without making a will. It may be shown, however, that the testator—the person making the will—had in mind some one else when he used the word "heir". In such case, if the testator's intention can be clearly shown, such intention will be carried out by the courts.

Peddler's License. Q. Please tell me why it is that a peddler is required to take out a license. A. Because, as a general rule, the business of peddling is a proper subject of police regulation.

Company's Liability. Q. I have been asked to become a member of a joint stock company and am thinking of doing so, but I have been told that the members are held individually responsible for any indebtedness on the part of the company. Is this true? A. The members of a joint stock company are liable for all the debts of the company, and every member is personally liable, unless the statutes of the state in which the company was organized have provided otherwise.

When A Fellow's Broke. Q. Will you kindly tell me what a judgment note is? A. A judgment note is a written admission of indebtedness and is usually in the form of an ordinary promissory note. It contains a power of attorney which authorizes the person so appointed to confess judgment for the amount specified in the note. There is also frequently a provision with respect to an attorney's fee for services in obtaining the judgment and it is customary to insert a clause in the note providing that there shall be no appeal. Other conditions are also sometimes annexed.

What Is A Highway? Q. I want to ask (1) what constitutes, in law, a highway and (2) whether a bridge is a highway. A. (1) Every thoroughfare used by the public is a highway. (2) A public bridge is a highway.

The Man Who Ecides to Take a Later Train. We scurry around helping him find his hat and gloves. We stand on the step and wave him off. And then—just as we're sitting down to recover our lost breath—he turns up, again! "I decided I could take that later train, after all," he announces. Ingenuously confident of our delight. We bring a counterfeit smile to our lips. Half an hour before, we should have been genuinely delighted if he had decided to take the later train; in fact we urged him to. But now—now that we've lost our breath helping him get off! Surely the man doesn't expect us to feel the same delight, now, that we should have felt if he hadn't let us waste our efforts and our smiling good-byes on him. And perhaps, deep down in us, those smiling good-byes hurt most; his coming back somehow caricatures them—makes them dance before us as so many useless grimaces. But our changeable friend sees none of our resentfulness. He'll never die from over sensitiveness. He laughs a guffaw.

The women in her neighborhood say Mrs. Tug Watts weeps so much about her work that her cooking needs no salt.

As a general proposition, the fancy vest seems to be predicated on the theory that every gentleman should carry his own checkbook.

The authorities are all in error as to the relative values of a flush and a full house. The relative values of a flush and a full house are determined by the player who first develops a lump in his thorax.

A man is forced to use a razor. But a woman can shave with liquid paste.

Tank Beverly says he is one of those who can put off being baptized until after the ice melts in the spring.

Women often masquerade as men. But no man seems to think it worth while to masquerade as a woman.

A lodge with fewer than four fatalities never makes much headway among the colored people.

I hate gossip and do my best to discourage it, but my opinion—and you can take it or leave it—is that Hex Bowley's wife is too thick with some of the unmarried men.—Mrs. Tug Watts.

Three cheers for the Missouri man who beat up his daughter's suitor so badly that the latter hasn't been able to play the cornet since.

Eph Wiley says that while the Willoughby girls have given a street parade every day since he came to town five years ago, he never knew one of them to sell a ticket to the evening performance.
