

THE PATRIOT AND THE SPY.

When the war broke out, and the men in the little European village went to the front, there was one who was unable to join the colors. He was a young married man, the patriot of the story, who had been injured in an accident. Among the townspeople who marched away was one, who had been the unsuccessful suitor for the hand of the patriot's wife. For years he had nursed his hatred, looking forward for revenge. He distinguished himself in battle, but one day, he was captured by the enemy and sent to a prison camp. While there he was offered his freedom if he would become a spy. He agreed and was sent to his own village. Here he deceived the patriot into believing that a large force of the enemy was marching toward the town, and that it was his duty to blow up the bridge over which the troops must pass. The patriot was captured with the explosives, and the officer gave orders that he be hanged from the bridge, but the rope broke and he swam to the shore. Later he arrived at his cottage where he accused the spy of treachery. Seeing the figure of a man at the window with a drawn revolver, the officer gave the order to fire and the spy fell dead. Later the troops of his own countrymen retook the town and the Patriot was rescued and honored for his bravery. With James Cruise and Marguerite Snow at the Palace today.

PROHIBITION

In "Prohibition, picture fans will soon have an opportunity of seeing a picture as stirring as a "Billy Sunday sermon". Free from platitudes it tells the story in six intense reels. In this big attempt to put over the story of King Booze, the author has symbolized the guiding impulses of our big and little selves, and calls them Demon Rum, The Angel of Prohibition, Mephistopheles, and Intelligence. These symbolic figures appear and disappear upon the screen as the minds of the drink enslaved men sway under the impulses of good and evil. In the story the father drinks like the proverbial fish. His friend, a talented lawyer, goes to the gutter. The dawn of a new tomorrow breaks upon him; he comes to the top like a rubber ball. The father has two sons. Both love the same girl. The loser, a jealous demoniac, determines to work upon his younger brother's inherited weakness for drink and finally lands him upon the physical and moral rocks. But love and intelligence triumph in the besotted minds of both father and son and they swear off. There is conflict all the way through—conflict with the spirits within, with the spirits in the bottles and incarnate spirits who are handy with their fists. It is a picture all should see. It is a picture no one will forget. Those who have seen it exhibited pronounce it one of the strongest films ever produced. At the Antlers tomorrow and Saturday.
