SENATORS DEMAND ACTION IN MEXICO

WASHINGTON, Jan. 12.—A resolution introduced in the senate this afternoon by Senator Sherman, of Illinois, demands the intervention by armed forces in Mexico, and the establishment of a representative government.

Dyer, of Missouri, introduced a resolution asking that congress be advised if the "watchful waiting" policy should not cease. Secretary of State Lansing wired Carranza regarding the massacre, but said that the wire did not contain a demand for action, and this step will not be taken unless Carranza is unwilling to offer redress.

Lansing is inclined to blame the Americans for remaining in Mexico despite the warning given time and again and called attention to the fact that passports were consistently refused to all who made application for the same.

Senator Borah, of Idaho, called the policy of Wilson's "sidestepping, compromising, procrastinating and un-American," and demanded intervention on the part of this government unless Carranza gives prompt and positive assurance of his power to protect Americans.

MODEL PRISON CITY BUILT BY ENGLISH

Many Teutons Profit by Care and Treatment Given Them.

ALL HOUSES HAVE ELECTRIC LIGHTS

Hospital Fully Staffed by Royal Army Hospital Corps Is Provided for the Prisoners.

By Wilbur S. Forrest.
(United Press Staff Correspondent.)

ROCHESTER, Eng., Jan. 3.—(By mail.)—"Prisoners of war or not, they're human." Such is the philosophy of Major W. C. Bulkley, D. S. O., British regular army, who commands England's largest war prison camp here at Rochester.

More than 3,000 of the Teutons who fought for the Kaiser on the Western front during the last fourteen months are reaping the benefit of British leniency in this model city, built exclusively for their use on the outskirts of this historic British town. No other press representative was along on this trip today and it is the first time an outsider has been permitted to inspect every nook and corner of the camp and talk unreservedly to the prisoners.

Surrounded by double fence of American barbed wire flanked by wire entanglements, hundreds of substantially built, one story houses, electrically lighted, amply windowed and roofed, have been built to accommodate the prisoners. The houses are in rows, fronted by streets which swarm with German grey-green uniforms. The main gate opens into a large parade ground surrounded on three sides by barracks which were used in peacetime by a regiment of British cavalry. In these barracks where Hanoverians captured in 1914, are living today, a regiment of Hanoverians fighting for England a hundred years ago, was quartered.

"I've got an uncle in San Francisco," said one of the prisoners, when he learned that an American was within earshot.

"Where does he live in San Francisco?"

"He lives on Jackson street. I used to visit him often," answered the prisoner, in perfect English. A well built youth whose counterpart is in every American city, was leaving the camp postoffice with a small decorated Christmas tree sent by his family in Germany. He had stood in line for 30 minutes until his name was called, and he had eagerly grabbed the tinseled evergreen as an officer, who first inspected it, handed it over. Stopping a minute to talk he rushed off to his hut where the same tree a few minutes later had the place of honor on a big table in the center of the room, with forty other prisoners admiringly looking on.

This prisoner used to be a sailor on a Seattle-Frisco steamer. When Germany declared war he hurried back to the fatherland.

An enormous kettle in one of the large camp cookhouses was presided over by a big fellow who used to be a chef in Germany. He was making tea for eight hundred men, but stopped a moment to explain that he had relatives in Mississippi. Another prisoner, nearby, was cutting quarters of beef into small cubic hunks for soup. A crate of cabbages and lentils was on hand to flavor the stew.

On the same street with this cookhouse was the school building, also the shower baths and gymnasium. In the school building, classes are heard by a young man who used to teach at Heidelberg. He's a teacher of languages. The effect of rigid military discipline imposed by the German army was manifest in the way the shower baths, occupying two buildings, are always in use.

"Turn out!" ordered a British officer, conducting the inspection. Forty German heels clicked, or would have clicked if shod, as twenty German youths in "altogether" stood rigidly at attention. The gymnasium encloses many apparatuses for physical culture and is well patronized.

Two large commissary stores provide the prisoners with food and supplies not included in the daily rations. German speaking British clerks are in charge. They sell everything from bananas and canned milk to clothespins at prevailing market prices. Prisoners who have established credit "until more money is sent from Germany," are able to "have it charged".

Certain brands of German wares, unobtainable elsewhere in England, are to be found in the camp stores. Freedom of action and speech is allowed in the camp. Work is voluntary. Hundreds of prisoners, however, prefer to work and have found employment erecting additional huts. For this labor they are paid by the British government. A dozen German cobblers operate a shoe repairing shop. This repair work is free. The British government furnishes the leather and pays the cobblers. An eight-chair barber shop shaves all comers for two cents per shave, of free if the unshaven is broke. The barbers are paid by the government.

A hospital fully staffed by the Royal Army Medical Corps is provided for the prisoners. About sixty of 1,000 prisoners brought to the camp in September after the battle of Loos were slightly wounded. Their wounds were dressed daily and all but one recovered. Several who were gassed are still confined.

"It was the English gas that got me," said a Prussian hospital patient. "If it had been German gas, I wouldn't be here. German gas kills the man who breathes it. English gas makes you sick for a long time but it doesn't kill you."

The patient's story was partially corroborated by the physician in charge, who stated that some British soldiers have recovered from German gas, but experience had proven that British gas is not so deadly.

Keeping clean is the only compulsory duty of the German prisoners. On entering the camp they are provided with fresh underclothing while their military garb is thoroughly disinfected. A tooth brush, hair brush and comb and clean towels also are provided. The prisoners wash their own linen in the camp laundry. Every man takes a bath twice weekly. A complete outfit of clothing is provided free to every man in need. Every prisoner with whom I talked was satisfied with his food, clothing and treatment, in the main.

not be had until such time as the club was in better financial circumstances. Some discussion followed this and it developed that Mr. Kohlhagen had been quite liberal in throwing off a month's rent now and then. J. H. Clerk thought the new president might be able to talk him out of six months, he had such a winning way.

There being no further business the meeting was adjourned, with the promise by the president that some plans will be formulated and presented by the next regular meeting. A spirit of optimism prevailed throughout every expression of all the speakers, there was a feeling that the right men had been put in for a year of good hard pulling, and that a bright rosy future is ahead for the club.
