MIGHT TRY THIS.

In view of the fact that the Mexican authorities still refuse permission for the use of their transportation facilities to this government, it might have some effect if our army officers would say something like this: Please Mr. Carranza, may we not have the privilege of using your railroads to take some food and other supplies to our soldier boys who are now in your country in pursuit of one whom you have branded as an outlaw and bandit? Our boys are a good way from their base and don't like your stuff, even if your people will sell it to them, and some of them are sick and should be brought back where they can get proper treatment. You may perhaps recall that it was through the influence of the president of our country that you now hold the position you have, and it would appear as though some sense of gratitude should be shown for this. It is not thought likely that any of our army officers will resort to any such twaddle as this, but one may not be surprised to hear of such a plea coming from Washington.

A MODERN SOLOMON.

Down in California they have a Judge who can be justly given the above title, if all his decisions are along the line of one he recently rendered. A woman was brought before him charged with selling a preparation which openly stated on its label that it would restore a luxuriant growth of hair on any bald pate. On being asked about the truth of this she said it would do as stated. His honor happened to belong to the front row at the ballet class, so he said he would try it out on his own head, and if it caused any hair to grow there, he would see that the charge was withdrawn, otherwise he would have to assess her the maximum penalty for trying to defraud. The returns are said not to have come in as yet.

Of the 385 delegates to the republican national convention at Chicago, nearly one half, or to be concise, 193, have already been selected, and of these, 285 are not bound by any instructions. Of the instructed delegates, Fairbanks has 43, Henry Ford 25, Senator Cummings 24, and La Follette 20. A few states will select their delegates under the direct primaries, where presidential preference must be shown, but the vast majority will arrive on the ground pledged to go one, and without any binding instructions, more than that they must work to that end that a man will be nominated whose success in November is unquestioned and practically assured.

The temporary chairman of the great republican convention, in June is an old newspaper man, and he will deliver the key note for the campaign in his speech on the opening day of the convention.

BEAUTY CHATS
 by EDNA KENT FORBES

Wearing Hats Correctly

It is a curious thing—the number of pretty hats that are spoiled by the manner in which they are worn. I have seen the most charming styles in millinery, seen good-looking women buy them, and then seen the whole effect spoiled by adjusting the hat at a wrong angle.

It would be hard to give any rules for wearing a hat—each hat has its own set of rules, and each wearer takes a different manner of using them. As a general thing, though, a hat looks better worn at a slight angle—for some reason, a hat placed straight on the head, or worn so that the lines of the brim cut a straight line across face and hair, is extremely unbecoming. Possibly this suddenly broken-off line gives the effect of a lid set atop the head.

Nature is all curves, you know. Hogarth, the great German painter, said the curve was the line of beauty—consequently, the hat with the soft brim and the irregular lines is by far the most becoming one to choose. If the brim be straight, the effect can be gained somewhat by slanting the hat to an angle.

Youthful faces look best in broad and floppy hats—or very small, snug shapes. Faces growing old and sagged a bit look best with a fairly broad flat, but not a "floppy" one—because the wide brim casts a shadow over the features, softening them. Vells are becoming to the maturing woman, too—they tone down the lines.

The older the face, the softer the hat should be. Only very young and very beautiful faces can stand the stiff straws and the severe silk tailored hats—older faces, even when the woman is only around thirty—look best when feathers break the hard edge of the hat.

Questions and Answers

Can you tell me what will remove a discoloration from my neck, caused by chloroform? It has been there two months, and does not seem to be going away.—K.

Reply—Chloroform acts on the skin like a burn—a slight one. It will bleach off in time, but you can hasten it by dabbing oxycerin on it several times each day.

Will you please tell me if one can get the brassieres for the reduction of the

Just in any dry goods or department store, and do you give the same size as the common brassiere?—J. L. P.

Reply—A brassiere does not reduce the bust. It is only a supporting garment which so perfectly fits the corset and figure that it keeps an stout woman from looking as bulky as the regular fully cut cover. If you wear them very tight, it will impede the circulation, and there might be a slight reduction through this, but it would be unhealthy and might bruise the busts. If you care for further information about bust reduction, send me a stamped, addressed envelope.

Sarah Bernhardt is in Roseburg and what a treat it is for all! The Divine Sarah, as she has been called by her idolators of two continents for the past two decades, has forsaken the spoken drama, in which she held countless thousands spell-bound with her wonderful emotional acting, owing to her infirm condition. She has been a great sufferer the last few years and finally as a last resort submitted to the removal of one leg. Due to her advanced years the operation was a great shock and it was feared that she would not recover. However, she has recovered enough of her old life and spirit to be able to cast her spell over all who witness her portrayal of Jeanne Dore in the silent drama at the Majestic theatre. Her wonderful power to depict extreme emotion has not been lessened by either age or illness and it is to be regretted that there will not be more opportunities to see her. It is not likely that Roseburg will ever again see Madame Bernhardt for during the production of Jeanne Dore the discouragement she experienced because she could not walk with her artificial leg and the physical distress resulting from her excessive avoirdupois, due to her enforced lack of exercise, led the Divine Sarah to make a statement to the press through her managers, announcing her definite retirement. Certainly she has earned a few years of peace and quiet after a stormy career of 33 years before the footlights. Bernhardt celebrated her seventy-first birthday the 25th of last October.

The Chicks Explore The Yard

After yellow Puff had once ventured out into the yard and had a pleasant walk without freezing his toes, the other chicks were glad to go too. It was tiresome to stay in the barn all the time, and they loved the fun of pecking at the hard soil.

Mary Jane hardly knew her little chicks these days. They had lost all their pretty yellow and white feathers and their cunning ways. "I don't see why their mother keeps on making such a fuss over them," said Mary Jane to her own mother one evening. "They are not even good-looking any more! I'd be ashamed to own chicks that looked as scrawny and as skinny as those do!"

But Mrs. Hen didn't feel that way—indeed not! She was proud when they lost their baby feathers, and prouder still when they began to grow bigger and more ungrainy looking day after day! It all depends on one's taste, you see; chicks that Mary Jane thought too big for beauty, Mrs. Hen thought very, very handsome.

And mother Hen liked to wander out into the yard too. Nothing she liked better than to strut out the barn door and walk up and down the garden in the sunshine with her brood of fine chicks at her heels.

"Here's where I got my reward," she said to herself one day. "I just as though they did understand didn't like sitting on my nest in and they followed their mother that cold weather, but look at my babies! And those stupid other hens are just beginning to hatch their eggs. It will be many a day before they have a chick to walk out into the yard with! Cluck, cluck, cluck!" (If you have guessed that Mrs. Hen was vain, you have guessed about right!)

"Now to-day," said Mrs. Hen, when they sallied forth from the barn in the morning sunshine, "the air is warm and pleasant. Let's walk clear around the house and explore. You will like to see the whole yard. Then, perhaps, by the time we get back to the garden, the sun will have melted the top layer of soil so that we may dig for worms."

Now all the little chicks didn't understand one thing about gardens, or around the house, or yards, or digging for worms, or—

"Cluck, cluck, cluck." (If you have guessed that Mrs. Hen was vain, you have guessed about right!)

But they did understand that they were to learn something new. And they liked that.

They all replied, "Cheep, cheep!" she said to herself one day. "I just as though they did understand didn't like sitting on my nest in and they followed their mother that cold weather, but look at my babies! And those stupid other hens are just beginning to hatch their eggs. It will be many a day before they have a chick to walk out into the yard with! Cluck, cluck, cluck!" (If you have guessed that Mrs. Hen was vain, you have guessed about right!)

So much was there to see, and so many things that must be pecked at and tested, that the whistles blew for noon just as the family turned out into the yard with! Cluck, cluck, cluck!" (If you have guessed that Mrs. Hen was vain, you have guessed about right!)

And at that very minute Mary Jane ran into the yard from school. "Oh, mother, look at my chicks!" she cried. "May I feed them right here?" And of course mother said that she could. So the chicks were fed their first "back door-step" meal and they liked it—dear me, YES!
