LA FOLLETTE'S SEAMAN'S LAW PROVES BENEFIT TO ALL.

WASHINGTON, June 10.—Uncle Sam, Employment agent, is putting into real effect, to the benefit of employers and seamen alike, the new federal seamen's law, Secretary of Commerce Redfield declared today.

Under the law, ships cannot put to sea from an American port without the requisite number of registered seamen. Objections were made to the law because it was claimed it would work a hardship on trading vessel operators in that they could not readily secure registered men in some ports, this difficulty tending to hold up their shipping.

"Here is a good illustration of how the seamen's law is operating," Secretary Redfield said. "We received a few days ago a telegram from the captain of a schooner at Boothbay, Maine, saying that he could not find the required number of registered seamen in port, and asking for permission to clear with what help he could employ. The port officials had refused him clearance because he did not have the required quota of registered seamen. The Department immediately notified the port officials to make an investigation, asked the Department of Labor to notify through its representatives

Mr. and Mrs. F. Sheehy Skeffington.

F. Sheehy Skeffington, until recently a resident of Long Island City, N. Y., was shot and killed as a participant in the Irish rebellion. According to Mrs. Skeffington, her husband was taken prisoner when at the risk of his own life he went to the rescue of a wounded officer outside of Dublin castle. She says he was arrested and executed without a real trial.

at Bath and other nearby ports any registered seaman there and send them to Boothbay, and gave assurance to the Captain that the Government was looking out for him. "Within a remarkably short time a sufficient number of able seamen to man his vessel arrived at Boothbay, idle men were given employment, and he was able to sail with a competent crew." A similar case was cited at Jacksonville, Fla. A steamboat captain appealed to the department for permission to sail with unregistered seamen. Within a short time the Department of Labor agents by cooperation with the Department of Commerce, placed at the disposal of the captain a sufficient crew of able seamen. Frequently the department has found captains of vessels lacking in diligence in their efforts to live up to the requirements of the law, and such captains are under the suspicious eyes of watchful agents of the department, the Secretary said. In one instance at Jacksonville, Fla., where a ship captain telegraphed the Department that he was unable to find registered seamen, it was shown that there were a number of such seamen available. The Captain escaped with a "calling" and a warning against a repetition of the offense. "The law is working out to good advantage of both employers and seamen," the Secretary said. "Cooperation with the Department of Labor and Customs Officials enables the Commerce Department to deal with any situation quickly to the benefit of the seaman, vessel owner, and shippers.
