THAT SCHOOL TROUBLE.

The lengthy article of Mr. Cleaves, in reply to the one from Superintendent Hamlin, will be found in another part of this paper, as promised yesterday. One thing is apparent in both articles, and that is the fact that brevity and conciseness in narrative of trivial things is evidently not taught in the school rooms.
Another is the discrepancy between the two statements regarding the same conversation which would lead to the surmise that memory training is not in the curriculum, and plainly shows that only a stenographic report can be relied upon when disputes of this nature come before the public. The whole matter, when balled down and sifted of the incon-sequential, indicates a lack of harmony that should not exist, and has led through more or less support of students and patrons to what would appear a practical ignoring in some quarters of the official head of the

With a few exceptions—such as evidenced in Lenore Ulrich's, "The Heart of Paula"—the photoplay gives the film heroine a happy climax from which time on, forever and a day, life is one sweet round of joy for her and friend hero. This is all very well, but at the same time one must realize that up until the period when the heroine reaches the end of the play —and happiness—there are thrust upon her many unpleasant happenings and heartburns.

Heartburn is defined in the New Universities Dictionary as "a burning affection of the esophagus, caused by acidity of the stomach," yet there are many of us who have experienced heartburns from other sources than someone's poor culinary endeavors or any acid-bearing edibles. Yes, I am sure there are many of us who know that heart-burns are often caused not by anything we may have eaten, but by the wearer of "the latest things in men's furnishings," which brings to mind the fact that the WEARER of said furnishings is not always the OWNER—not until the last installment has been paid the tailor.

However, to get back to my original thought. While the heroine suffers many anxious moments before reaching the happy climax, still once in a while she is allowed a little pleasure in the interim. For instance, as mentioned before, in a scene in "Nell of Thunder Mountain," I was accorded a most exhibited by the American people, no matter what national flag was represented in the successful attempt. Of course, the very fact that the trip has been doubly hazardous on account of watchful enemies, has added an interest and fascination that would have otherwise been absent.

Things have changed, here in Oregon as well as other places. It has not been so many years ago that the stealing of a horse was worse than looting a bank, and the punishment was swift and sure, the culprit usually being found stretching rope, his body furnishing the weight and one end around his neck. But today in this state, a self-confessed horse stealer—who happened to be in possession of considerable money, was let off with a four thousand dollar fine.

George Stearns, Joe Smith and Al Deer were among the many Oakland residents who were in the city today attending to business matters.

Hettie Barter left this morning for Grand Junction, Colo., where she will visit for several weeks with relatives. Her mother, Mrs. B. F.
Lohr, accompanied her as far as Astland and will remain in that city for several days visiting with friends and relatives.

John Livingstone, one of the oldest and best known of the early pioneers of this valley, made a pleasant call at The News office this morning. Mr. Livingstone is nearing his four score years, but is hale and heartly. He said he came to this county over sixty one years ago, and settled with his parents on a donation claim near Dismoreville, the family moving here from Missouri. There were Indians all around this section he said, and their tongues were very familiar sights. Later on Mr. Livingstone took part in the Rogue River Indian war and can tell of many thrilling adventures. He is now enjoying a well-merited quiet retired life at his home on Mill street in this city.
