PIONEERS VISIT NICKLE MOUNTAIN

Geo. Quine, O. L. Willis, Will Q. Brown and J. B. Horner Chat Together.

ENJOYED A BIG DINNER

Pioneer Stories Are Rehearsed—Toasts Given That Add Much Humor to the Occasion—Slacker Proved to Be a Calf.

Four well known pioneers met in Riddle last Sunday morning. They were George Quine, the high sheriff of Douglas county; Will Q. Brown and O. L. Willis, the war marshals of Riddle precinct, and Prof. J. B. Horner, of Corvallis. As they were told there would be no preaching in Riddle that morning, the quartette decided that a visit to Nickel mountain would be a recuperative pastime closely akin to worship. Moses, and later Joaquin Miller, went up into the mountain to catch new inspiration. So to bring the practice down to date, the quartette agreed to "go up into the mountain" also.

The delightful ascent of four miles was made in a Dodge automobile, geared on intermediate, just fast enough to survey the charming valley below, on which the sun shines every day when the sun is not curtailed by fog or cloud. Midway up the mountain a rattle is heard across a ravine. Is it a "slacker"? The car stops. No; it is only a calf eluding our singular conveyance which it views for the first time; and the rumble of our engine announces that our chariot is again pursuing its ascent up into the clouds.

The unfolding reel of scenery is so delightful that everybody wants to talk at once. But the journey has ended too soon, and all alight. The high sheriff who spent the previous night in a successful hunt for outlaws is given a bed, while the others make a short survey of the mines of nickel, ochre and chromite that were developed by the mineralogist of the party.

Then a slight detour to the aquarium, where a school of large eastern brook trout were lazily sunning themselves, until the strangers appeared, when the funny tribe suddenly darted off in every direction. But upon observing the approach of the keeper to the strangers, the trout ventured high again, for fish like moon, judge others by the company they keep. After a few handfuls of crumbled crackers and bits of fresh meat were thrown to them, and when their dinner was eaten, comparative quiet was restored. Then they gracefully glided through the cold mountain water like so many pretty poems while their dainty fins were keeping time with the rhythm of the murmuring falls near by. Ah, it would be a sin for the fisherman's hook to ruthlessly drop into that pool of Eden on Nickel mountain.

But the Mark Twain of our party, hearing a long rumbling sound, announced that an automobile was straggling up the mountain. All immediately repaired to headquarters only to learn that it was not an automobile, but that it was the high sheriff moving like a thunderbolt turned loose in a saw mill. Such was the respect for the Allan Pinkerton of the party, however, that the others did not disturb him, but withdrew to the opposite side of the mountain where it would be possible to hear themselves speak in ordinary conversation.

Soon dinner call assembled the group around a table richly spread by the landlord, who is an excellent "chef." The landlord said the grace that had previously been offered by Robert Burns:

"Some have meat, but cannot eat; Some would eat, but have no meat; We have meat and we can eat, So the good Lord be thanked!"

There was a juicy steak and all that goes along with trimmings. The bread was piled high after the fashion of a pyramid. The coffee had the flavor of mountain water and the choicest brand of coffee pod that the market affords. Everything including the strawberries was heated out according to scriptural measure. Maple leaves served as napkins; and a rich center piece, consisting of a bouquet of Azaleas tastefully arranged in a vase improvised from a discarded oyster can, helped to give the aspect of a drummer's table in a first class hotel.

But wit and humor and flow of soul were the sauce which converted the delectable dinner into a mountain feast. His honor, the landlord contributed much dignity to the occasion in his station as toastmaster. Prof. Horner responded to the toast, "Our Host." Sheriff Quine, "How it happened that J. B. H. happened to be in Canyonville and Riddle, when the recent burglaries were attempted there." Squire Brown "The Dignity of the Court During Fishing Season." (Great applause.) O. L. Willis "Our Ancestry Who Wore Maple Leaves in Society." (Repeated applause.) The original Mark Twain never did better.

Rehearsals from pioneer history were interspersed with some vacation stories, and one of the number selected a choice bouquet for an absent friend. The descent was then made into the valley, where all having been drawn closer together by the solemn up-in-the-heights, took an affectionate farewell of one another in language more familiar than the staidness of social etiquette usually permits. For it was: Good bye, George; Good bye, O. L.; Good bye, J. B.; Good bye, Will; and the four pioneers took their departure, counting the probable number of annual visits up Nickel heights that they all might hope yet to enjoy.

RESOLUTION FOR RED CROSS DONATION

The following resolution was adopted yesterday by the county court in making an appropriation for the Red Cross:

WHEREAS, the United States is now at war with the empire of Germany and its allies, and

WHEREAS, to the end that said war may be brought to a successful termination, the American people have pledged their lives, property and resources, and

WHEREAS, the American Red Cross is an institution chartered by congress and dedicated to the cause of humanity in caring for the sick and wounded of our army and navy, and for the wives, families and dependents of our soldiers and sailors who have gone forward in the defense of our country, and

WHEREAS, it should be the paramount duty of every patriotic American citizen, municipality and institution to contribute to the support of said American Red Cross in order to enable it to successfully carry on its patriotic and beneficent work, now therefore,

BE IT RESOLVED, By the County Court of Douglas County, Oregon, in regular session assembled, that there be and hereby be appropriated the sum of five hundred ($500) out of the miscellaneous fund of the county to the American Red Cross, and the county clerk is hereby authorized and directed to draw a warrant upon said fund in the amount of $500, payable to J. R. Wharton, treasurer of the Douglas County Red Cross committee.

Dated this 20th day of June, 1917. R. W. Marsters, County Judge, B. F. Nichols, County Commissioner, W. E. St. John, County Commissioner.

"GENEROUS" OFFER REFUSED.

(By J. E. McClintock.)
Word has reached Red Cross headquarters here, that a prominent citizen of Douglas county, a man who is worth no less than $40,000, a man who has enjoyed the liberty and privileges of this government all his life, and for whom the sons of America are freely offering their services in this world war for liberty for our allies, and for the continuation of of liberty in our own beloved country, this man whom the committee counted on to give a liberal sum to the great work of the Red Cross, actually and deliberately offered the committee who waited upon him the measly insignificant sum of one dollar and fifty cents. Why there are laboring men in Roseburg, who have not more than a bare living, who have given three times this amount. Let it be known that the committee refused to receive the offering, telling the gentleman that they were afraid he might need it for his own use.

In spite of all the publicity and explanations given there are still some who ask "what becomes of the money?" and "why don't the government pay this?" and "we are afraid some of the money will be wasted." Usually these people have no intentions of giving a cent any anyway, but think they are putting up some tremendous argument that will dismiss the committee from further pressure, and afterward shake hands with themselves for being so brilliant—the word brilliant is a good one for use in this connection, as it means imitation or worthless.
