BLOCKADING GERMANY.

A real blockade of Germany has begun at last. The iron ring around the central powers is being closed. The work began and carried on by Great Britain, France and Russia with but partial success is being completed by the United States.

It is well known that British sea power has not availed to prevent Germany from importing huge quantities of foodstuffs and war materials from Holland, Switzerland and the Scandinavian countries. It is largely through the food thus obtained that she has been able to hold out so long. All her little, neutral neighbors have taken advantage of their situation to import more food than they needed and sell their surplus to Germany. The United States is now almost the sole hope of Europe's food supply. We can keep the countries in question from feeding Germany by selling them merely as much food as they need for themselves. And this our government is going to do hereafter, through the exercise of powers conferred on the president by a recent act of congress.

The thing is fairly simple. The enterprise looks innocent enough on the face of it. An "export council" has been formed, under the president's direction, which is going to "direct" all exports of foodstuffs and war materials. There is nothing explicitly said about an "embargo." But an embargo it is, just the same. And it will soon be drawn so tight that there will be little leakage into Germany. The neutrals involved will have no reasonable ground of complaint.

Thus the German government, by driving us into war against our will, subjects the German nation quickly to the greatest peril it has yet faced. Food, skilled observers say, will probably decide this war. If German harvests are a failure this year, and if our food embargo works as well as it should, we shall have contributed greatly toward shortening the war. It may seem cruel. It is. But Germany has brought it on herself. The war she began is infinitely cruel. Her ruthless methods have steadily added to its cruelty. It is merciful to end it, even by using hunger as a weapon.

German submarine hits us below the belt, but the Yankee blockade hits Germany inside the belt.
