DISMAL PICTURE IS DRAWN BY GERMAN

(By Associated Press.)

AMSTERDAM, July 13.—A writer in the Junker organ Kreuz-Zeitung, of Berlin, draws a dismal picture of the consequences to Germany of a peace without increased power and annexations. He says: "Seeing that after the natural exhaustion of such a giant war, Germany could not soon contemplate a fresh struggle,

Great Britain and America would think, after a Scheideman peace, they could treat Germany as they liked. In other words an Anglo-American world domination would be firmly established and Germany itself would be regarded as a second rate power, Great Britain thereby in reality attaining its war aim.

"Belief in unlimited military and maritime superiority by Britain and North America would henceforth dominate the world. But a reaction, through an unsatisfactory peace, on our internal political life would be the result. With the first joy at the ending of the war the question would be earnestly asked—ed States navy surgeon on duty at the Portland recruiting station in an address on "War as a Highly Organized Science," delivered here today before the department of scientific instruction of the National Educational Association.

"One of the most salient features of the military-naval establishments of the opposing powers is the specialization of the one-time-citizen-soldier along scientific war and industrial lines, and since past and present events do not justify hope for an early peace, it behooves our school to train our young men to think and work along scientific lines to the end that mobilization of such resources will insure our nation against disaster," Dr. Sinclair continued.
