

BOEHM HUSBAND OF DILLARD GIRL

Was Tool of VonIngles—Disappeared at Beginning of the War.

WIFE WELL KNOWN HERE

Man Who Was German Spy—Rumored to Have Been Shot—How- ever It is Thought That He Escaped.

"Captain Boehm," referred to in the story of international intrigue by Germany, revealed in the papers found in the raided office of Wolf von Ingel, is believed by Portland persons who know him to have been Hans Boehm, German reservist, whose career in this city is recalled by many.

Hans Boehm, who it was learned later, held a commission as captain in the German reserves, was formerly secretary at the Arlington club for some time. He developed a considerable acquaintance here and later was made steward-manager of the Commercial club. After a short term in that position he became steward for the University club.

While in this state he married a southern Oregon girl, whose parents live near Dillard. They have two children.

Shortly after the European war broke out, Boehm left Portland. His movements after that are more or less obscured. It is thought he was active for months in weaving a web of plot and intrigue at the behest of his own country.

His trail was uncovered by the authorities at some widely scattered points and at one time the government secret service agents were looking for him to cause his arrest. They were unsuccessful in their attempt to capture him, however.

He sent for his wife and children and they left Portland and met Boehm in New York city. So fearful was he at that time of arrest that Mrs. Boehm and the children traveled by a separate steamer to Holland, while he followed on another boat, under an assumed name and by use of a false passport, it is said.

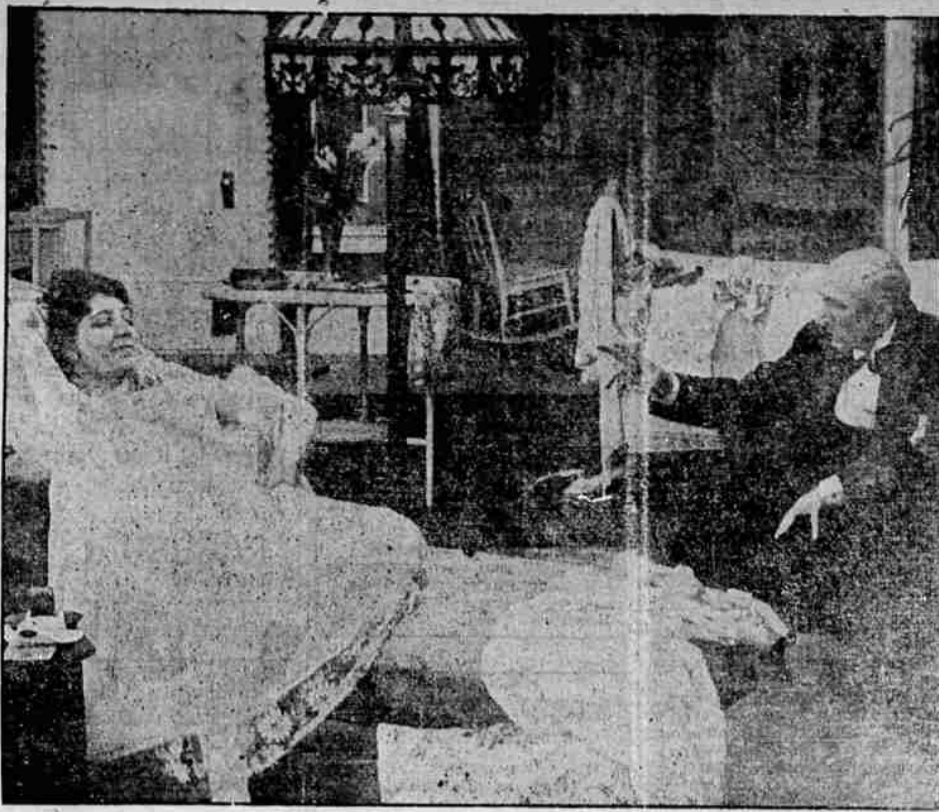

Mrs. Boehm and the children went through in safety to Germany, where they are now believed to be living.

Captain Boehm, still intent on the duties of a spy which his government had entrusted to him, was off again on his perilous mission and later was taken prisoner while on an English vessel from Spain enroute to Holland. It is not known that Boehm ever entered England, but it is believed he confined his activities to the safer neutral countries.

At any rate he was made prisoner and the charge brought against him was that of having made use of a false passport. He is understood to have been interned and, although the rumor circulated here that he had been shot, this was never confirmed.

The Captain Boehm referred to in the correspondence of Wolfe von Ingel is believed here to have been none other than the former affable steward of leading Portland clubs, who later made use of his acquaintance with men of affairs and of things American in spying and intrigue—Oregonian.

Captain Boehm, while a steward at the Arlington club, Portland, met and soon after married, Miss Helen Willis, daughter of a well-known Dillard rancher. Mrs. Boehm and her children left for Germany soon after the war and are now residing near Berlin. Mrs. Boehm has a large circle of friends in Roseburg and vicinity.
