WHY TEACH GERMAN?

Why teach the German language in our public schools is a question that is going the rounds these days. What use has a red-blooded and loyal patriotic American citizen got to the Kaiser's category? Of what use is it will it ever be to a student of the Roseburg high school to get an "A" tongue "shaped" as an "elder" twenty the language used by our strongest enemy in this world war to drag us down to a Prussian level?

If the United States and its allies win this war, as they surely will and "clean up" the German empire as it should properly be reduced there will not be a sufficient number of the inhabitants left from the Kaiser's domain to hold a country fair at a coal mining town.

Then again, it does not fit the proper spirit of true American patriotism to our incoming generation to instill a language in their minds that we now, and will for some time after, hold in the lowest dregs. Many of the important high schools throughout the United States have eliminated the German language entirely, and there will be hundreds more do likewise before this war is ended.

While Roseburg is in the "round up" business to eliminate "A" of every character it would not be amiss for the school board to consider dropping the language completely from the high school studies. It looks like it's fair to continue the branch of the school work an English would not be a dissenting voice if it was "trimmed, right off at the root."

A good way to take the "root" out of this much talked of German propaganda is to start right at the root.

There are a dozen men that in Roseburg against whom it is believed were circulated asking that they be hanged "but not now" can easily probably get a thousand names in one day. This is the case best employed against the proposed improvements to the county jail and court house. But not now, let's see, can you camouflage to let the propagandist wear itself out by the watchful waiting police. This bad old game policy means never when properly defined.

When we shall have ended this right it will be a long time before anybody starts another war.
