A FRIEND IN NEED

A friend in need is a friend indeed, and how you can tell is to accommodate him in time of his need, and then a little later ask him for it back in return. And that is what I have done—is to give credit to many a man and now I am going to ask them in return to come and pay their bills in full not later than December 25—this month, as that is the time that I need the "mon" to pay my honest bills, and all of my friends that will come to this call will be marked "true blue," and all that fail to answer this call will be classed as bums for their friendship is one-sided, and he is liable to take the bankrupt law that his wife may wear $1.75 stockings, and that is something rotten. Now, kind friends, this call is to you all that owe this man, D. J. Jarvis—and we must have it not later than the 25th of the present month. D. J. JARVIS. d25

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE.

At the Antlers theatre, commencing next Monday, George M. Cohan, the popular actor-author-producer of both theatrical and film worlds, will appear in his second photoplay or Artercraft Pictures, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." One of Mr. Cohan's greatest Broadway sensations, this play adapted from the book of the same name by Earl Derr Biggers, scored an emphatic hit all over the country several years ago. As a motion picture vehicle for the inimitable comedian, it offers an admirable subject in which to present to good advantage his famous mannerisms and at the same time, discloses particular adaptabilities to motion picture presentation.

Announced as a "mystery farce," this picture is confidently expected to amaze and thrill to a much greater extent than even the original play. Several distinct twists to the story, which tells of how an ambitious author of half-raising literature won a wager to write a 10,000 word story in twenty-four hours, are evinced with startling result. Many humorous situations are presented in typical Cohanesque style and a surprising climax, such as has never before been presented on the screen is suddenly displayed with telling effect.

Staged under the direction of Hugh Ford, whose many successes under the Famous Players trade mark have placed him among the very foremost exponents of modern filmcraft, the story is given a much greater scope on the screen than was possible on the stage. An exceptional supporting cast to the popular Broadway star consists of various well known film artists, as well as several members of the original cast of the play, including Anna Q. Nilsson, Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, popularly known as Eida Furry, Joseph Smiley, Russell Bassett, Corene Uzzell, G. Warren Cook, Carlton Macy, Eric Hudson, Paul Everton, Frank Losee and Purnell Pratt. That the success of Mr. Cohan's second photoplay will greatly increase his following among film patrons already established as a result of "Broadway Jones," is assured. Entirely different from his first motion picture which met with such great public favor, "Seven Keys to Baldpate" will disclose to the cinema world a character which, although typical of his one and only type, is at the same time a revelation in Cohan accomplishments.
