EXAMPLE OF PATRIOTISM.

If your conscience still sleeps and your soul is still unstruck by your country's need in this great world crisis—

If you are still a stranger to that sacred emotion of patriotism which animates and ennobles those who love their country better than themselves—

If you have been unable as yet to feel the hot blood of the patriot coursing through your veins, and the spirit of self-sacrifice for your flag stirring within you—

It will pay you well to consider the case of the nurse, Edith Cavell, and to learn to what sublime heights of nobility and service patriotism can elevate the human soul.

A frail little woman of calm and noble countenance stood at the edge of a newly dug grave. Facing her was a firing squad of soldiers of His Gracious and Christian Majesty, the German emperor. So slight was her stature that it seemed "a breath of wind would blow her away." And yet, so greatly did the life of this fragile atom of humanity endanger the safety of the German empire, and its boasted army of ten million men, that she had been condemned to die.

Her life had been devoted to relieving human suffering. In her nursing institution in Brussels she had cared for all comers, German hate, and heroism and with the sweet natural dignity of true womanhood she faced her executioners and sank into her grave a martyr to human liberty whose memory history will enshrine in the hearts of true patriots for all time.

When the hour came it found the gentle breast and the kindly heart, so soon to be pierced and torn by the leaden messengers of German hate, calm and unquivering. With sublime heroism and with the sweet natural dignity of true womanhood she faced her executioners and sank into her grave a martyr to human liberty whose memory history will enshrine in the hearts of true patriots for all time.

She was denied the comfort of her own clergy, but the prison chaplain reported that she was courageous to the end saying "I am glad to die for my country."

How does this sense of patriotic duty compare with yours? Are you doing your part? If not, will you not permit the example of this glorious little patriot to make the paltry war sacrifices now so urgently asked and so justly due from all Americans in civil life?

The Christian Science church provides each of its military members with a vest-pocket edition of Science and Health. Further, each man so desiring is sent the Christian Science Monitor, the daily newspaper of the Science church. In each cantonment in the country there is a camp worker under the direction of the various Science camp-welfare committees. It is the duty of this worker to see that the needs of Science boys are met and to give needed advice.

Benedict Arnold was an American officer, trusted and loved by George Washington. Three cowboys caught the spy whose papers exposed Arnold. Keep your eyes open. Report suspicious persons who ask curious questions.

Swat the fly! Spot the spy! Spies feed on little crumbs of conservatism, little glances of observation. Starve them out!

One German army has already occupied America. The invisible host of spies is everywhere.

MAKE YOUR SYRUP WITHOUT SUGAR

Miss Haldeman's Demonstration Results Perfectly Satisfactorily.

BEETS REDUCED PULP

Juice Pressed Out and Boiled Down to Proper Consistency—Product is Sweet and Palatable—Better Than Commercial Syrups.

Syrup without sugar is a fact. When The News announced, only Wednesday, that the thing was possible, a whole lot of people thought the matter a good joke. But the "syrup expert" in this office has seen and tasted the product and it is pronounced extra good. In fact, it is a great deal better than any of the commercial syrups on the market. Don't believe it? Well, it's so. This new commodity is made of sugar beets, and when ready for use is darker than some of the commercial syrups, more of a brownish than a reddish color, but is very sweet and palatable, has good body—can be boiled down like maple sap to any consistency desired—and is the next thing to pure cane or beet sugar syrup. About the only advantage the real sugar syrup has over the beet syrup is that it is almost colorless or white. In sweetness and palatability the beet syrup is the equal of the other. It is mild, positively without any "bite" to it, and when one puts a little maple into the new product the unsuspecting consumer would be almost sure to say that it was the real thing. In fact, the sugar beet syrup made by Miss Haldeman has very much the appearance of maple syrup, only perhaps a little darker.

When asked how the syrup was made, Miss Haldeman said the process was simple, and any one can do it. The sugar beets secured from the Sutherland everfresh plant were prepared by the department of agriculture. The beets were carefully peeled, taking care to cut away the tops well below the head, and after slicing them they were run through a common meat chopper, using the coarse knives. This feature was not suggested by the department instructions, but Miss Haldeman found it more satisfactory than merely slicing the beets. The pulp was placed in a container and hot water poured over it, and then left on the stove for two or three hours, but not boiled, just kept good and hot. After that it was placed in a press and all the juice and water separated. This was carefully strained through a cloth and placed on the stove and boiled in exactly the same way maple sap is reduced, care being taken to skim off the scum while boiling. This process removes all of the water and reduces the beet juice to the proper consistency desired. Six pounds of beet pulp made one pint of fine syrup. At that same rate 24 pounds of beets will make a half gallon. A ton of beets will make about 40 gallons of syrup. That many beets can be grown on about one tenth of an acre, and 40 gallons of syrup is more than the average family will use in a year. In fact a gallon of syrup a month would doubtless be a fair estimate, but even allowing two gallons per month, which is liberal, it is easy to see that a little patch of beets will do for the family. A liberal use of syrup will reduce the sugar consumption more than half, and it is for this reason that the government is putting out this information about sugar beets. Sugar is needed for the allies, so everybody should include a patch of sugar beets in their spring garden plans. Miss Haldeman is daily expecting a recent bulletin from the department dealing with the variety of beets best suited for syrup making, as well as giving details otherwise useful to the novice. The News will make known these details, and as it is yet early there is plenty of time for everybody to arrange for devoting a part of their garden to this product. In doing this, the grower is not only conserving for use of the allies, but he is saving an outlay of cash for sugar that must otherwise be purchased at high time prices.

GREAT LOSS OF MAIL.
 By the sinking of the steamship Andania on January 30, 1918, advices from the British postal administration show there were lost 2,605 sacks of mail, of which 831 were for the United States, the contents of which originated in England, France, Gibraltar, Ceylon, Straits Settlements, Italy, Switzerland, and the Netherlands (Amsterdam), the balance being mostly of British origin for countries beyond the United States, including Canada, Australia, and New Zealand. In addition there were 23 sacks of mail from United States war vessels and 15 sacks from the United States army postal service in France.

The sacks of mail from the army post offices in France are estimated to have contained 30,000 letters and a small quantity of parcel post, the letters being those posted in France between the 15th and 20th of January, 1918.

DO YOUR WEAR A UNIFORM?

Now that the big Home Guard dance is a thing of the past, until the new suits arrive to remind us of how we have helped by our support in different ways, we wish personally to thank all who helped in one way or another in this great cause.

Home Guard suits look nice and we are proud of those who wear them, but you who do not wear a uniform must also look neat and prosperous. We are carrying a fine line of samples and would be pleased to show them to you or take your order for a suit at any time. It is economy to buy a suit now before the prices are raised and light weight material begins to come into use.

THE SON OF DEMOCRACY.

Benjamin Chapin's big human series, "The Son of Democracy," is the story of the building of America, an epoch of democracy showing freedom in the making. The leading characters are Abraham Lincoln, the greatest of all democrats, his father, Tom Lincoln, who could neither read or write and Tom's father, Abraham, friend of Daniel Boone and who was killed in a fight with Indians. Benjamin Chapin plays the president, Tom Lincoln and Abraham Lincoln, the grandfather. The Son of Democracy presents the intimate incidents in these adventurous lives showing the early Americans as they really were, their humor, their pathos, their problems, making them live again as regular people.
