HANDY MEN.

An item from a newspaper exchange notes that one of its townspeople, a factory employee, has within the past three months built for himself a two-story house. He did it Saturday afternoons and evenings outside of working hours, although he had had no experience in house building.

In these days when carpenters are scarce and highly paid, the securing of a comfortable home is a great problem for many people. Most men are helpless on any kind of building operation.

Still there are a considerable number who do attempt to put up little dwellings. In the outskirts of almost any manufacturing town, you can find simple little cottages that workmen have put up for themselves in odd moments.

They are bare to the point of ugliness, lacking all the finish that a trained carpenter would give even to a simple little home. But no doubt the artisan who put them up feels a satisfaction in his tiny little mansion, which he exhibits proudly to visitors.

The great majority of men are strangers to the saw and the hammer. They can hardly fix a door latch or repair a broken window screen.

In the present condition of the labor market, it is a heavy charge if all these little repairs must be made by hired help. So the schools that have put in manual training courses are giving the working people a very practical lift in meeting one of the burdens of their lot.

Where a man has no mechanical skill, a house soon runs down, and the place acquires a dilapidated appearance. A nail and a screw skillfully applied here and there keeps up the tone of the property and makes it more valuable.

If the tenant can perform these little repairs to a hired house, the landlord is content with a more moderate rental.

Another evidence of the far-reaching efforts of German propaganda, which unfortunately is not so readily silenced as the German guns, is included in a collection of books recently presented by the English government to the University Library at Bologna, Italy.

It takes the shape of an anti-English book printed by German agents in San Francisco, and it is written in the Hindustani language. It is probable that German propaganda was widespread in a number of Indian dialects.

COMB SAGE TEA INTO GRAY HAIR

Darkens Beautifully and Restores Its Natural Color and Lustre at Once.

Common garden sage brewed into a heavy tea, with sulphur and alcohol added, will turn gray, streaked and faded hair beautifully dark and luxuriant. Mixing the Sage Tea and Sulphur recipe at home, though, is troublesome.

An easier way is to get the ready-to-use preparation improved by the addition of other ingredients, costing about 50 cents a large bottle, at drug stores, known as "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," thus avoiding a lot of fuss.

While gray, faded hair is not sinful, we all desire to retain our youthful appearance and attractiveness. By darkening your hair with Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound, no one can tell, because it does it so naturally, so evenly. You just dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning all gray hairs have disappeared.

After another application or two your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy, soft and luxuriant and you appear years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.
