MONEY FOR NORMALS.

Schools May be on Same Basis as Other State Institutions.

SALEM, Or., March 11.—An examination of the laws creating the State Normal Schools seem to show that these schools are as much state institutions as are the Reform School, Mute School and Blind School and that there is authority for their continuance even though the appropriation bill should be held up by a referendum petition.

Advocates of the referendum movement expect to cut off the Normal School expense along with some others, by filing the petitions, but there seems to be as much authority for continuing the Normal Schools as there is for the Blind School or Mute School.

Under the statutes and the decisions of the courts, the Secretary of State is bound to audit claims wherever there is a law in existence authorizing the expense to be incurred. An examination of the law on the subject therefore becomes important.

The law creating the Drain and Ashland Normal Schools is contained in sections 3501 to 3509 of the code. The act provides for a Board of Regents, consisting of the State Board of Education and nine members appointed by the Governor on each board. Section 3505 defines the powers and duties of the boards, among which are the following:

"To appoint and employ a president and vice-president of said school and such professors, teachers and employees as may be necessary, and to prescribe their duties, compensation and tenure of office or employment."

The Weston Normal is governed by sections 3490 to 3500 of the code. Section 3500 gives the Board of Regents power similar to that quoted regarding the Drain and Ashland schools, and it is also provided that the board shall have power "to purchase any needful and proper apparatus, books or articles, and to provide for all necessary fuel and other supplies for use in the school."

The same power to employ teachers, fix their compensation and tenure of employment is conferred upon the Board of Regents of the Monmouth Normal.

In the case of the Monmouth, Drain and Ashland schools, authority is given to expend any money belonging to or appropriated for such schools, and in the case of the Monmouth Normal, it is specified that the expenditure shall be "according to the terms of such gift or appropriation," but these provisions do not appear to be a limitation upon the power to employ teachers and fix salaries.

DUNBAR MAY NOT AUDIT BILLS.

Though the laws creating the normal schools authorize the boards of regents to employ teachers, etc., it has always been the accepted ruling that this authority depends upon and is limited by an appropriation. In 1897, when the Legislature failed to organize, Secretary of State Kincaid refused to audit claims from the normal schools, and no suit was brought against him to compel him to pass upon the claims presented. The normals were conducted without any aid whatever from the state, until the special session of 1897, when the Legislature appropriated money to pay the expense incurred during the time when no appropriation was available.

Because the law has always been construed by state officials as not authorizing expenditures for the normals unless appropriations have been made therefor, and such construction was acquiesced in by the normal school people in 1897-98, Secretary of State Dunbar will not audit claims for these institutions if the appropriation bill should be held up by
