THE AUTOPYROPHON.

Simple Automatic Fire Alarm Device by a Danish Inventor.

W. F. Wright, American consul general at Munich, Germany, makes an interesting report on a new automatic fire alarm, the "autopyrophon." Invented and patented by a Danish scientist, C. A. Hildner. The apparatus acts only when a sudden wave of heat is generated in an enclosed space, but is not influenced by a general and even high temperature. It is ten centimeters (3.94 inches) high, seven centimeters (2.76 inches) broad and two centimeters (.78 inch) deep. It can therefore be easily fixed anywhere.

It consists of a small glass tube bent in the shape of a capital U. This tube, the ends of which are closed, is half filled with mercury, the other upper half containing a highly volatile liquid—for instance, sulphuric ether. One of the upper parts of the glass tube is surrounded by a cover of some non-heat conducting material, so that a sudden rise of temperature affects only the other, or free, part of the glass tube.

In case the temperature rises evenly the whole apparatus is affected, and no warning signal is given. If, however, the temperature in the room is suddenly raised, as by the outbreak of a fire, the ether above the mercury in the glass tube, which is unprotected, evaporates, and the pressure of the generated vapors causes the mercury to sink in the tube, while it rises in the opposite part.

Both parts of the tube are fitted with an electric wire melted into the glass, so that when the mercury stands equally high in both tubes the electric current passes through and the apparatus remains silent. But should a movement of the mercury take place because of a sudden rise of temperature the electric circuit, or contact, is impeded, and any kind of electric alarm may be set into motion at any distance and at as many places as required. The apparatus also indicates impediments and interruptions of the electric current. The substances need no renewal, and the apparatus acts an indefinite length of time.

At one of the demonstrations the alarm was raised within eight seconds from the time a small heap of shavings was set on fire in the corner of an ordinary sized room. In this case the apparatus was fixed near the ceiling at the end of the room opposite that where the shavings were burning.

It is calculated that one apparatus is needed for an area of 600 to 800 square feet.

FOR THE PIANO MOVER.

Holding Machine of a New and Valuable Character.

Holding large and bulky articles to the upper floors of a building takes skill and experience and is seldom attempted except by those acquainted with the business. The method ordinarily used is to put up a block and tackle, which is always very cumbersome and in which heavy timbers are necessary.

A Canadian has devised the very useful apparatus shown herewith. It is designed for the purpose of holding and putting through windows in the upper stories of buildings large, heavy and bulky articles. The apparatus is so constructed that it can be set to communicate with the first, second and third stories of buildings, and when the work is done it can be quickly taken down and compactly put together for transportation.

One of the chief advantages is that large articles can be put through the windows, as the parts take up little space. A piano could be hoisted with little or no strain to the instrument, with no danger of scratches. It would also do away with the trouble of getting up narrow stairways and passing around sharp corners. The article to be hoisted is placed on the carrier, which is raised by the usual rope run over pulleys and attached to a roller turned by a crank. Riggers could use this apparatus to advantage, as could also piano movers or movers of safes.

Lorenzo D. Frazer of Toronto is the patentee.

Swimming Elephants.

The elephants of Burma, in India, are used for a variety of purposes. Throughout the day they work steadily as laborers in carrying the great timbers from place to place, a single elephant doing the work of a score of men. Their great diversion in hours of rest is bathing, and they take their baths in a curious way. The keeper takes his place on the back of an elephant and thus placed makes a tour of a great lake or river, the huge animal swimming under him at a surprising rate, while he is kept high and dry above water.

WHEN FORKS WERE NEW.

How Their Use Impressed a Lady the First Time She Saw Them.

A lady who saw forks used for the first time at a dinner of Henry III. of France records her "impressions" of the occasion. Henry had in 1574 been tendered a magnificent reception in Venice. At this entertainment forks were used. The royal guest observed them with much interest and immediately introduced them to the French court.

It seems from the account of the lady, who had never used them before, that some others were in the same predicament. She writes: "They never touched the meat with their fingers, but with forks, which they carried to their mouths, bending their necks and bodies over their plates. There were several salads. These they ate with forks, for it is not considered proper to touch the food with the fingers. However difficult it may be to manage it, it is thought better to put the little forked instrument in the mouth than the fingers."

"The artichokes, asparagus, peas and beans were brought. It was a pleasure to watch them try to eat these with their forks, for some, who were less adroit than the others, dropped as many on their plates and on the way to the mouth as they were able to get to their mouths. "Afterward a great silver basin and pitcher of water were brought, and the guests washed their hands, though it seems as if there would not be much scent of meat and grease on them, for they had touched their food only with those forked instruments."

THE MISSISSIPPI.

Immense Volume and Varying Moods of its Yellow Flood.

"The Mississippi river has an irresistible attraction for a person of imaginative mind, but perhaps its most impressive characteristic is the majesty with which its turbid, yellow tide sweeps along between the shores, impressive by its sullen murmur and inspiring awe by its immense volume," said a traveler.

"The river is sublime no matter when or where you view it, and one has only to catch a glimpse of the yellow flood, veiled by rain or glistening in the sunshine, to fall beneath its spell. At times the river moves so smoothly and peacefully that you are almost lulled to sleep by the gentle purring of the water, that constant eddying and washing sound that is distinctive of the Mississippi. Then, again, the water will swirl angrily around a hidden snag or rushing with impetuosity against the yielding bluffs it will eat into the earth, and tons of dirt will rumble down only to be absorbed and swept away. Perhaps for a moment the water will assume a chocolate color, but the influx of yellow tide from above will soon dissipate every trace of what was once an acre of cotton field. Sometimes there are trees growing along the shore that are engulfed. These fall with a crash into the flood, spin about for a moment and then drift slowly down with the current, their half-drowned boughs rising at intervals from the water."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Could Not Be Settled Out of Court.

A good story is told concerning a certain magistrate, who always endeavors to smooth over any little differences which may be brought before him.

On the occasion in question the warrant was one for technical assault, and it came out in the course of evidence that the parties were neighbors and had been on the best of terms for some years.

"It is a great pity," said the judge, "that old friends like you seem to have been should appear before me in such a way. Surely this is a case which might be settled out of court."

"It can't be done," answered the plaintiff modestly. "I thought of that myself, but the cur won't fight."

Very Likely.

The Prevalence of Bright's Disease

"Dr. Loomis states from clinical observations and from a large number of autopsies at Bellevue Hospital, that 90 per cent of men and women, over 40, suffer from some form of Bright's Disease."—Denver Medical Times.

This profoundly serious statement, from one of the highest authorities in the United States, means that the average person's kidneys do not work right, and that what is commonly called Kidney Trouble is Bright's Disease, and is more common than people have any idea of.

And the census bears out Loomis' distressing conclusions, for it shows that the deaths from Bright's Disease are simply appalling, increasing from 22,330 in 1890 to 58,758 in 1900.

The admission of a kidney trouble is a common salutation. Mild at first, the patient is seldom frightened till it has thoroughly fastened. The realization that it is Bright's Disease comes slowly, as the later symptoms develop, and the usual treatment being futile, death results.

Fulton's Renal Compound is the only cure known for Bright's Disease. You owe it to yourself and to your family to not let that apparently mild kidney trouble run a day longer without attacking it.
