

Liver Pills

Ask your doctor if he knows a better pill for a sluggish liver than Ayer's Pills. Then follow his advice.

It is impossible, simply impossible, for any one to enjoy the best of health if the bowels are constipated. Undigested material, waste products, poisonous substances, must be daily removed from the body or there will be trouble, and often serious trouble, too. Ayer's Pills aid nature, that is all.

ROAD EXPERIMENT.

Oil Containing Asphalt to Be Used With Sand at Cape Cod.

The Massachusetts highway commission is to conduct an interesting experiment in road building on Cape Cod, where there is no stone to speak of. A heavy grade of Texas crude oil containing a large percentage of asphalt will be used with the sand. The sand road will first be shaped with a road machine, and heated oil will be spread over the surface. A second lot of oil will be sprinkled on when the first coat has been on for two weeks.

The surface will then be cut up with a disk harrow so as to mix the sand and oil to a depth of four inches. After this has been done the road will be rolled and the surface sprinkled with a thin layer of sand to absorb the surface oil. A little work of this sort was done under the highway commission's supervision about two years ago, which has resulted satisfactorily.

Importance of Good Roads.

The Gaffney (S. C.) Ledger gives the following fact and comment, which afford a practical argument on the subject of highway improvement in a nutshell:

Some Cherokee county land sold the other day at public outcry and brought from $16 to $37.50 per acre. This land was twelve miles from the county seat at that. If we had macadam roads this same land would have brought $50 to $100 per acre. Half a million dollars spent in building good roads in Cherokee would mean an increase of a million dollars in the value of our farm lands alone. Will people never awake to their own interests and begin doing something for themselves, or will they continue to abide in the dark?

A MAGICIAN'S TRICKS

"Hurry up, young man, and state your business," said the capitalist, frowning over the gold rims of his glasses. "This is my busy day."

"You'll find my business stated on my card," replied the well-dressed young man, with a confident smile. The capitalist ran his finger up and down over a row of cards on which were written the names of persons in the anteroom who were waiting to consult him.

"Is your card here, sir?" he asked. "No, sir," was the serene reply. "Well, what do you mean by coming in here and trifling with me in this way?"

"I came on business, sir." "What business?" "My card will explain that." "Where is your card?"

"In that drawer, sir," said the young man, pointing to a compartment in the desk marked "Private."

"What are you—a lunatic?" asked the capitalist, thinking of Russell Sage and his experience with the dynamite crank and looking hastily around the office for a means of escape.

"National Intelligence," replied the young man. "What—what do you say?" gasped the now alarmed man of business.

"National Intelligence," Round the ragged old thing, ragged old man."

"Oh, that's a pun," stammered the capitalist. "Oh, that's a pun," stammered the capitalist.

"Yes, of course—the thing that they use up at Bellevue to find out if a fellow's crazy."

"I don't think I quite comprehend," said the capitalist.

"Why, the doctors use those words as a crazy test. If the patient can rattle the words off without making the 'r's and 's,' he's all right. If he's a little off, he'll get his tongue tangled up in a half hitch."

The capitalist breathed a sigh of relief. "And you took that method to prove your sanity?" he said.

"Just it," said the young man. "But about your card?" ventured the capitalist, a little doubtful again.

"If you will unlock the drawer, you will find my card and my business on it," he reiterated.

The capitalist impatiently unlocked the drawer, and his face changed somewhat in expression as he saw lying there a card which read as follows: "Louis Leloir, Teacher of Ledger-mania."

He looked up at the young man and smiled slightly. "Well, I guess you've got me this time. How did that card get there?"

The young man bowed politely and smiled very engagingly as he said, "I can't tell you that, but if you wish to learn some new tricks I will instruct you for a small amount."

"I have no time to learn tricks. This is my busy day, and I hope you will let me transact my regular business and allow me to bid you good—Say, how the mischief did you do that?"

The question was natural enough, for Mr. Leloir, who was about to go, wiped his brow with a large silk handkerchief and then dropped the handkerchief into his hat. As he did so he turned the inside of his hat toward the capitalist, but the hat was empty.

"Do you mind doing that again?" "I will teach you the trick for $2."

A clerk entered and handed the capitalist a message. The capitalist read it, frowned and then looked at the mysterious hat.

"Tell Mr. Boker that I can't see him at present."

"But he says it is a matter of immediate interest," insisted the clerk. "I can't see him at present," said the capitalist testily.

The clerk bowed and left the office. "Now for the trick," said the capitalist. "Do you absolutely guarantee that I can do it?"

"I do."

"All right. Here's the money." The conjurer proceeded to initiate the capitalist into the mystery of the trick, and the capitalist began to practice it.

"Tshaw!" said the business man. "That's too simple for anything."

"That's the beauty of all my tricks—they're simple. Here's another. Take that cane in both hands."

The capitalist grasped the cane firmly. The conjurer tapped it a few times with a brass ring, and presto, the ring was whirling around the cane, having encircled it in a most inexplicable way.

"How much?" asked the business man. "Five dollars, sir."

In about five minutes the capitalist knew all about the ring and cane trick, and then the magician showed him how to pull underwear from a stove-pipe hat, how to make a dollar dance all over the floor as if it were alive, how to change tanks of ink into water and a dozen other astonishing feats of ledger-mania. It took four hours for the conjurer to teach the capitalist all the tricks he knew, and the bill was considerably over $100. Meanwhile there was a very angry crowd of business men in the anteroom, but that had nothing to do with this story. The capitalist, however, left his office by a side door.

The Book That You Love.

There is no dearer friend or better company than the book that you have read and reread, loved and relished, that is known until you can almost see the passages that appeal to you.

That is the book that molds your life, whose message comes to you at every crisis.

If you have no book that means just this to you, then you are to be pitied as having lost one of life's greatest joys.

BAD BREATH

"For months I had great trouble with my stomach and used all kinds of medicines. My tongue has been actually as green as grass, my breath having a bad odor. Two weeks ago a friend recommended Cascarets and after using them I can tell you they are the best. I feel better and my breath is sweet. I can now sleep soundly and I am suffering from such troubles." Chas. H. Halpern, 114 E. 10th St., New York, N. Y.
