"Cascarets are certainly fine. I gave a friend one and the doctor was treating him for cancer of the stomach. The next morning he passed four pieces of a tape-worm. He then got a box and in three days he passed a tape-worm 45 feet long. It was Mr. Matt Brock, of Millersburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. I am quite a worker for Cascarets. ROOSEVELT HANDLES TAFT.

In the October American Magazine "The Interpreter" writes very entertainingly about politics. A brief extract follows:

"I have always wondered how Taft, with his volcanic temper, managed to get along so well with the president. I think lately it has been a matter of real personal affection. But there must have been trying moments for the 'big fellow.' He doesn't like being 'bossed,' and anyone who is brought into official contact with Theodore Roosevelt is sure to be 'bossed' with a frankness and a thoroughness never before known in our political history. Mr. Roosevelt's original notion was to put Mr. Root forward as a candidate for the succession. He discovered later—perhaps he discovered it before—that the brilliant Secretary of State was a perilous candidate, and he offered the place to Taft. The Secretary of War had long been ambitious to go to the Supreme Court, and even now, I think, he would rather be chief justice than president. The chief justice-ship is more suited to the division of his mind that he likes best. But the president persuaded him, and he became a candidate. Everybody knows how Mr. Roosevelt has conducted the campaign. Mr. Taft has had about as much to do with it as I had. But he willingly subordinated himself to the strangely forceful character of his sponsor. He said nothing and did nothing.

"The impression in Washington is that Taft's sympathy with Roosevelt's policies is somewhat less marked than his subjection to Roosevelt's personality. And this is true about other members of the cabinet. In former times the relations between the president and his cabinet were rather free and easy. But there is little that is easy and nothing that is free about a cabinet officer under Roosevelt. The attitude of the two big men of the cabinet is one of such respectful submission to their chief as old and valued clerks might display toward a great financial magnate. They are playful together sometimes, but his playfulness is patronizing and theirs is secretarial. It is not that they are not his equals intellectually. But intellect is not all that counts in the relations of men. There is that mysterious, indefinable force in the born ruler which subdues the reasoning powers and even controls the selfish ambitions of those who let themselves venture near it. I heard some people of long experience in political life at Washington discussing this point the other day.

"Do you think Blaine or Olney or Whitney would have stood it?" asked one. "Do you suppose they would have been so subordinated?" "I believe they would," said a wise old critic. "They would have succumbed or they would have got out."

"And Stanton?" "Roosevelt would have Stanton carrying his hat box in a week."

A Travelling Man's Experience.

"I must tell you my experience on an eastbound O. R. & N. R. train from Pendleton to La Grande, Ore.," writes Sam A. Garber, a well known traveling man. "I was in the smoking department with some other traveling men when one of them went out into the coach and came back and said: 'There is a woman sick unto death in the car.' I at once got up and went out, found her very ill with cramp colic; her hands and arms were drawn up so you could not straighten them, and with a death-like look on her face. Two or three ladies were working with her, and giving her whiskey. I went to my suit case and got my bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy (I never travel without it), ran to the water tank, put a double dose of the medicine in the glass, poured some water into it and stirred it with a pencil; then I had quite a time to get the ladies to let me give it to her, but I succeeded. I could at once see the effect and I worked with her, rubbing her hands, and in twenty minutes I gave her another dose. By this time we were almost into La Grande, where I was to leave the train. I gave the bottle to the husband to be used in case another dose should be needed, but by the time the train ran into La Grande she was all right, and I received the thanks of every passenger in the car." CRIME WON HIM A WIFE.

Now Wants to be Punished, but Law Can't Reach Him. PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 28.—Announcing his earnest belief that the crime which won him a wife in his younger days must be cleared from his conscience by a confession, J. Smith appeared at the Federal building Saturday evening and recounted his story to at least three different officials. Fifteen years ago Smith was deputy postmaster at Wolf Creek, Ore., where he became acquainted with a charming young woman. As deputy postmaster he found that the girl was corresponding with a young man in the northern part of the state. Smith took a hand in the game because he had determined to marry the woman himself. He says he intercepted the letters addressed to her, which caused her to abandon thoughts of the other fellow and that when he pressed his suit she accepted him and they were married.

Since coming to Portland he has been converted by the Tongues of Fire sect. He confessed and was forgiven by his wife, and she went to the United States authorities for his punishment. He stated that the other man was a better match for his wife and that the only way to square it up would be to go to the island. "I would rather go to heaven through the penitentiary than to keep silent and take a chance on the other place through the church," he said, but unfortunately the statute of limitations ran against his offense years ago, and the officers could not accommodate him.

GREATEST MARVEL OF AGE

Portland Telegram: One of the features of recent marine news in the New York city papers was the splendid, storm-defying fight made by some of the big Atlantic liners that were caught at sea in the equinoctial gales. The story is one of spectacle and interest inasmuch as it indicates that the point is reached in high-class passenger ship construction where the utmost fury of the sea is set at naught.

It is related how one of these modern aquatic giants made headway into the mountainous seas at a rate of 23 miles an hour, and better; and how another with a blade of her propeller snapped off was halted but a latter known what to expect, and with the ship, as with the man, to be forewarned is to be forearmed.

But in all the various struggles, except as to the accident recorded, there was scarcely any giving way to the fury of the sea. The speed maintained through it all, in most instances, was nearly the record-breaking clip; and the comfort of the thousands of passengers on board the latter known what to expect, and with the ship, as with the man, to be forewarned is to be forearmed.

This is a long cry from what has been the happening, since first men went down to the sea in ships. By mechanical and constructive genius, man has practically worked out the conquest of the ocean; he has made it as safe to travel upon as a country highway. Mountains of water that formerly swayed the decks of ships, and sometimes crushed them like eggshells, beat in vain against these magnificent floating palaces with walls of steel. Neptune in his most turbulent mood can do little more for the passengers in one of these crack liners than to create the impression that it is rough weather. There is perhaps no greater marvel of the age than this.

Chain of Demonstration Farms.

Campbell is en route to Amarillo, where he has stationed one of his demonstration farms. He recently visited Midland, the location of another one of his farms. For the past five years Mr. Campbell has been engaged exclusively in establishing these farms, and has a chain of them stretching from Canada to Gulf of Mexico. He has dedicated his life to efforts to educate the farmers how to farm scientifically, overcoming lack of rainfall and various other obstacles. He is known throughout the land, and his methods are being extensively followed with success.

Accompanying Mr. Campbell to Fort Worth was Judge John Davidson of Midland, who was instrumental in establishing the Midland farm, and who is now organizing a commercial club and doing other things calculated to boost his section of western Texas.

BREAKS LIFE PARTY TIES FOR BRYAN.

Celebrated Dry Farming Expert Leaves Republicans.

Bisbee, Arizona, Review: H. W. Campbell, of Nebraska, the dry farming expert, who was the dry farmer recently looking up the proposition of putting in an experimental dry farm, went from here to Fort Worth, Texas, where he was interviewed by the Record. Following is the Record interview with Mr. Campbell:

A lifelong republican, and although for over twenty years a neighbor at Lincoln, Neb., of William J. Bryan, H. W. Campbell, the renowned dry farming expert, has never cast a democratic ballot, but he will break his long record this year. He will vote for Bryan, who, he says, is one of the finest and cleanest Americans in public life today.

"It's hard for a man to leave a party to whose tenets he has so long adhered," said Mr. Campbell, while passing through Fort Worth, "and it took me a long time to finally decide to vote for Bryan. My wife had much to do with it, although Bryan's own ideas and principles have aided in influencing my decision. My wife thinks the world of Mrs. Bryan, and since the Bryans came into prominence and their ideal home life became known and my wife became attached to them, she has used all her persuasive powers to bring me over to her side. And she has finally won. But I willingly surrender, for I, too, have learned to admire Mr. Bryan and his ideas to such an extent that I can no longer refuse to vote for him for the highest American office.

Bryan Rule for People.

"One principal plank in Bryan's platform this year which appeals to me, and must accordingly touch every true American is his cry, 'Let the people rule.' I believe if he were elected the people would rule. There is no longer need to wait, no longer a change in national government affairs is put off, the more strongly entrenched in power will the republicans become. They have held the reins long enough. Most of their leaders and officeholders are after the almighty dollar. It might be the same were the democrats in power, but I don't think it would be so with Mr. Bryan. He is a friend of the masses. He is an American with policies that would benefit the whole people. With me it will be a choice more between men when I walk to the polls November 4 and cast my first democratic ballot for William J. Bryan."

Years of experience and constant study have broadened Mr. Bryan wonderfully, says the dry farming expert, and likewise the people of Lincoln, his home town, have become gradually more attached to him.

Carry Lincoln—Perhaps Nebraska.

Though Mr. Bryan failed to carry his home town in his former two races, Mr. Campbell says there does not seem to be any doubt that he will be accorded a splendid home vote, and will carry Lincoln in the November election. "The people have come to understand him better," Mr. Campbell explained, "and although many Lincoln republicans will not renounce the republican party, they intend to vote for their neighbor, whom they appreciate as a man."

Mr. Campbell is not willing to predict that Bryan will carry Nebraska, but he would not be at all surprised if he did so, and he thinks Bryan has a better chance of election than in either of his former races.

Explaining further Bryan's growing popularity at home, Campbell related an incident that happened some three years ago. A well known lecturer was scheduled to deliver a lecture in a church auditorium one evening. Mr. Bryan agreed to introduce the visitor. The church was packed and several thousand could not gain entrance. The crowd was astonishingly large and the promoters were at a loss to understand it. But it soon became evident. Mr. Bryan received a cordial reception, but during the address the crowd had dwindled to one-half. Thus his home people came out to hear Mr. Bryan and not the visitor.
