The season for killing elk in Oregon closed Thursday. Though quite a number of these animals were killed during the season, the fear that they would practically be exterminated proved groundless, at least so far as this part of the state is concerned. County Treasurer J. E. Sawyers, who hunted for elk and bagged a monster buck in the Coos River country a few weeks ago, estimates that the elk in the region between the Coos and Umpqua rivers number not less than 300. Owing to their well-high inaccessible haunts, he thinks there is little danger of a complete slaughter of the animal, there is a growing fear, however, that the days of the Oregon elk are numbered unless the legislature passes a protective law. The season is scheduled to re-open next September.

Wednesday's and Thursday's rain raised the North Umpqua river three feet and enabled Kendall Bros. logging crew to bring 500,000 feet of logs down to the site of their proposed big sawmill at Winchester. Most of these logs will be converted into lumber and used in the construction of the mill. Sawing has already commenced and will continue for the next two weeks. The mill will probably begin the manufacture of lumber for market by next spring.

S.S.S. MAKES A LASTING CURE

There are certain mineral medicines which will remove the external symptoms of Contagious Blood Poison, and shut the disease up in the system for awhile, but when the treatment is left off the disease will surely return. Then the loathsome symptoms of ulcerated mouth and throat, copper-colored spots, falling hair, sores and ulcers, etc., are usually worse because the disease has made rapid progress on the internal members, and weakened the constitution and general health of the sufferer. S. S. S. is the only remedy that can be used with perfect safety in the treatment of Contagious Blood Poison, and with the assurance that a lasting cure will result. This medicine, made entirely of roots and herbs of recognized curative and tonic value, antiseptics and destroys the powerful virus of the disease, and by purifying the blood of every particle of the poison and enriching and strengthening the circulation, removes every symptom of the trouble. S. S. S. does not hide or cover up the disease in any way, but drives it entirely out from the blood, leaving not the slightest trace for future outbreaks.
