Portland Oregonian: While sitting in one of the rooms in the Elks' Club yesterday, R. G. Prossolo, a visitor, suddenly cried out in pain and urged those present to send for a doctor. The man was evidently ill, and Dr. Homer L. Keeney was summoned to attend him. He said there were symptoms of ptomaine poisoning and after administering remedies for temporary relief, had the patient removed to Good Samaritan hospital. Last night Dr. Keeney said that he, and other doctors called in consultation, were unable to determine whether the distress was caused by ptomaine poisoning or came from appendicital complications. At 6 o'clock the sick man was improving and was thought not to be in a dangerous condition. Mr. Prossolo is engaged in railroad work at Roseburg and belongs to the Elks' lodge in that city.
