D. R. & N. WRECK KILLS ENGINEER AND FIREMAN.

Brakeman, With Legs Mangled, Crawls 1/2 Mile and Saves Limited From Serious Disaster.

PENDLETON, Ore., March 20.—Two men are dead, two engines demolished, and five loaded box-cars, with their contents, are piled in a confused mass, as the result of a double wreck, the first in the history of the O. R. & N., which occurred eight miles east of Pendleton this morning. The dead are: Fireman Edward Hopple, La Grande, Or. Engineer, S. L. Risk, La Grande. The present disaster is believed to have been caused by the reckless running of an engine without a train.

A few days ago Hopple took out an accident policy in favor of his sister.

Wreck Makes Heroes. SAN BERNARDINO, Cal., March 20.—Crashing through a split switch at Lugo Sliding on a mountain district of the Santa Fe, 30 miles from San Bernardino, the second section of the fast eastbound Red Ball freight today was wrecked, two trainmen were killed and another so seriously scalded that he cannot live.

The California Limited, west-bound, unsuspectingly tearing down upon the wreck ahead, was stopped less than half a mile away through the heroism of two of the freight's crew.

C. E. Magee, the engineer, terribly scalded from escaping steam from the burst pipes, managed to crawl from the demolished cab. The head brakeman, A. D. McClellan, suffered the mangle of one of his legs.

In the moment that followed the sudden, death-dealing crash heroes were made. Engineer Magee, as he emerged from the twisted mass that was once his engine, beckoned to the head brakeman, McClellan, who was himself hurt. As the youth, his feet mangled and his body a mass of cuts and bruises, dragged himself forward, Magee, his throat seared by the escaping steam, whispered: "My God, boy, the limited!"

Rushing toward them was the westbound California Limited, which they had intended to meet at Hesperia, five miles away. The brakeman dragged his injured form down the track for half a mile. Then the train bearing 100 passengers rounded a curve and he was found sitting on the rail, feebly waving a red flag.

Doc Averts Train Wreck. CAMERON, W. Va., March 20.—Annoyed by the barking of a farmer's dog, William Miller followed the animal a mile along the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and in a deep cut found a pile of ties on the track, apparently placed there to wreck a train.

New York and Chicago Express No. 7 was due at the moment, but as the train was 20 minutes late, Miller succeeded in clearing the track before it appeared.
